Redhead Was No Flirt

She was red-headed, so the traffic cop's remonstrance was couched in dulcet tones after he untangled the traffic snarl.

"But you should have held out your hand to indicate you were going to turn," he murmured.

"I should say not!" snorted the fiery one. "Some of those loafers would thing I was waving at them and trying to flirt. Is that all?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the cop meekly.

"My brother, sir," replied the man, bitterly, "'e's gone into the work'ouse, sir; the first of our family to disgrace us."—Montreal Star.

Bridal Wreath and Roses

By LOIS BULL

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

MARY ANNE MARSHALL lifted her eyes mechanically to the clock on the tall building. One-thirty! The heavy night air hung dank and fetid over Times Square. Her mouth twisted pitifully. Three years before she had stood on the same spot, eager eyes full of the pulsating miracle that was Broadway and Forty-second street. Her heart had been throbbing madly to the exciting beat of it all. Soon her name would blaze in lights along Mazda Lane.

At the memory, unwanted tears overflowed her eyes. She jumped back quickly from the edge of the curb as a cruising taxi swerved sharply to avoid her stumbling figure. The angry blast of the horn tore through the night. Mary Anne stood dazed for a moment.

The cry of a flower hawker cut through her consciousness, "Only a dime a bunch, lady, only a dime!" He thrust a tiny boutonniere of fragrance toward her.

Mary Anne turned. Bridal wreath and roses! It couldn't be! She was fumbling in her purse. The fragrance of the flowers sent overpowering waves of bitter sweet nostalgia through her heart until she forgot how tired she was. Bridal wreath and roses in the heart of Times Square!

"Yes, miss?" the hawker brightened. Who could tell who'd buy flowers? "What's that? How many bunches have I left?" he counted them . . . "Just seven, miss. All of them? Yes, miss. Thank you, miss! . . .

The peddler heaped the flowers into her arms, slapped the empty basket perfunctorily against the curb to empty the loose dirt, pocketed the silver and dove into the subway. He cast a puzzled glance over his shoulder at the girl crossing the street.

Bridal wreath and roses for a dime! Mary Anne walked down the street, cradling the flowers close to her breast. Why! They were country flowers. Red roses! Tom's flower. He used to send her sheaves of them. Bridal wreath! Tom had planted bridal wreath around the door of the cottage he had built for her.

She walked along in a dream. Her eyes lifted to the spot where a few weeks before there had been a gigantic draped picture of "Mary Anne Marchant, formerly of the Earl Carroll Vanities." It was still there. But she hadn't worked there for many a long week. Not since the night she'd been fired for refusing to do a fan dance under a spot.

They mustn't use her picture! What if somebody from home should pass and see it? Should guess, then, her carefully guarded secret. Discovered that the "Mary Anne Marchant" of that half-draped figure was Tom Marshall's girl, Mary Anne, who had gone to New York to make good on the stage.

They mustn't ever know that the home town girl who had been May queen at the State university was now only a hostess in a Fourteenth street dance hall.

Tom didn't know. He must never know. He must still be made to believe her pitiful letters, written so bravely. He must never guess how she wished now she had stayed on at the university and married him. What seemed heaven now hadn't seemed exciting three years ago. Marrying a mathematics professor in a small college town. What a fool she'd been!

Her eyes lifted to the garishly tinted print. Why go back to the ghastly tiny room in the wretched boarding house? Why not just keep walking on—until she came to the Hudson? Then no one might ever know that the Vanities job had lasted only six weeks. (The Courier-News had run a picture: Local girl makes good on Broadway.)

The fragrance of the roses filled her nostrils. The tendrils of the bridal wreath etched patterns of delicate lace against the blood red petals. There would be bridal wreath and roses in bloom about the cottage Tom had built for her. For over a year pride had kept her from going to him. She couldn't let him think she was surrendering from despair, especially now that he had won a Guggenheim scholarship and was to spend a year in Europe.

She had read about it in a paper. Tom—her Tom had made good. How proud she was of him! His letter had come asking her to return and marry him before he sailed.

Suddenly she buried her face in the wilting mass of flowers. Bridal wreath and roses for a dime. Magic for a dime! Magic, to make her see how nearly she had let her silly pride rob her of the thing she had always wanted: Tom's love.

The tense lines in her face relaxed. Through tears her eyes shone luminously bright like stars. Nothing mattered but her love for Tom, made more precious as she realized how nearly she had lost him.

She hurried around the corner where she knew an all-night telegraph office would be open. She fumbled in her purse as she ran. It was pay night. There'd be enough. Her fingers trembled as she pencilled the words, although she knew what the answer would be. Tom had said he'd wait forever, if need be. He wasn't going to wait much longer. Mary Anne handed the message to the clerk.

He took it smiling. "Pretty flowers, miss," he said as his pencil counted off the words of the wire.

"The most beautiful in the world," she answered, a new lilt of joy in her voice. "Bridal wreath and roses!"

NEUTRALIZING GAS KILLS WAR VAPORS

New Chemical Given France by German Exile.

Paris.—A new neutralizing vapor which destroys the effectiveness of certain recently developed German poison gases capable of penetrating any gas mask is reported to have been discovered. This city's population is breathing considerably easier upon learning the good news, writes Edward Taylor in the Chicago Tribune.

The vapor is scattered in the air and it combats and neutralizes the poison gas immediately. Neither the chemical formula of the vapor nor the names of the gases it is intended to be used against were revealed.

The discoverer is a savant of a big German university of Polish origin who was driven out of Germany by the regime of Reichsfuehrer Hitler. He has been working quietly in a Paris suburb and recently communicated his discovery to the French war ministry, declaring he offered it free to the French people in gratitude for the hospitality France showed him.

May Take Place of Masks.

It is hoped his further investigations may reveal defense vapors against other gases. Some competent scientists declare that the continued development of neutralizing gases may thrust aside the use of gas masks, none of which would be usable against all gases, and the most efficient of which would be utterly useless against certain of the new German gases.

One of the latter is said to use an arsenic base and to penetrate even glycerin and nickel.

Paris earnestly hopes the new anti-gas method can be placed on such a cheap, practicable basis that general distribution will be possible, since there is neither anything like an adequate supply of gas masks in the Paris area nor the possibility of the manufacture of a sufficient supply in time to do any good.

Find Defective Work.

As a result of the flood of gas masks of private manufacture and of nondescript types, many of them defective, the government some time ago forbade the sale of any but government inspected masks, in the meantime designating only 17 centers where they may be purchased.

The supply was utterly inadequate and it was declared that even if the war ministry inspection staff worked night and day the production of inspected masks would be negligible. Curiously, some of the masks passed by inspection were made in Germany. Some quarters suggested that the government, whether intentionally or not, is applying the philosophy of the wartime general, Maxime Weygand, regarding civilians. It is: "In case of an air attack the best thing for them to do is get out of the city."

Tests Disclose Imported Grass Boon to Farmers

Washington.—Because of its value as a forage crop that will regrass arid land of low value, demand for crested wheatgrass seeds exceeds the supply, according to a report from the Department of Agriculture.

The grass was introduced into this country from the dry plains of Siberia. The unusual demand for seed was attributed to several causes. The excellent way in which the grass came back last year after two years of drouth, its value for hay and pasture, and the comparative ease with which it can be harvested and planted have proven its value to the farmer, the department said.

Experiments made at Judith Basin, Mont., have disclosed that cattle pastured more days and made greater gains on fewer acres of crested wheatgrass than brome or native grass. Wheatgrass lasted 141 days, as compared with 125 days for brome and 55 days for native grass. The average gain per steer in pounds was 291 for wheatgrass, 249 for brome, and 114 for native grass. Similar results were obtained at other stations.

The grass appears two or four weeks earlier than native grass in the spring and lasts four to six weeks longer in the fall, if moisture conditions are favorable. It makes hay of a high quality, is a good seed producer, and is an excellent grass to use in rotation, especially as a sod crop for flax.

Death Masks Discovered in Mounds in Wisconsin

Madison, Wis.—Known history in this state now goes back 15,000 years and a new record of ancient residents here is announced by Prof. Ralph Linton, University of Wisconsin anthropologist, in the discovery of what are said to be the first portrait death masks ever found in America. The masks were found in recently opened burial mounds in northwestern Wisconsin.

The masks are said to be 3,000 to 4,000 years old. Professor Linton believes they are a record of aborigines who came to this region from the South; people touched with the civilization developing in Mexico. They were farmers and traders and knew the use of metal, probably coming here for copper.

Professor Linton says in his report: "Our work has thrown much light upon the life of this ancient people, and especially upon their treatment of their dead. These were not buried at once, but were kept for years as honored members of the community."

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

The past: On the night of June 4, 1929, 600 distinguished and well-known guests, each of whom had received an invitation and paid $10, attended the opening of the Central Park Casino, which had been taken over by the Dieppe corporation. That corporation had on its governing board none other than Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., William Rhinelander Stewart, Jr., and Adolph Zukor. James Walker, then mayor, was present and so many nights thereafter that the Casino in no time at all became known as "Jimmy Walker's night club." Society flocked there and the corporation prospered. An investigation conducted some time after that auspicious opening showed that in four years it had collected more than $3,000,000. But as most of that great gross came from the pockets of the rich, there hadn't been much complaint. Still, there were those who thought the city should get more than $8,500 a year as its share.

* * *

The present: Among those who cherished that thought was Fiorello H. LaGuardia, who was making a campaign for mayor. He charged that the Dieppe corporation was so greedy that it even took a percentage of the waiters' tips. Besides that, the playground of the public Central park was no place for a swanky eating place. LaGuardia was not elected that time. He ran again and was. His choice for park commissioner was Robert H. Moses who held ideas similar to those of his boss. So he promptly ordered the Casino to close up. The matter got into the courts, the corporation holding that as the contract didn't expire until 1939, it intended to stay. It lost the first decision. Now it has lost an appeal and the Casino, the scene of so many brilliant affairs, is to be torn down to make a playground for youngsters.

* * *

No compromise: The principal complaint against the Casino concerned prices charged for food. As a sort of concession, Sidney Solomon, suave manager, offered price reductions. The cup of coffee that had once cost 50 cents was reduced to 40 cents and the $4 table d'hote dinner to $3. But Commissioner Moses couldn't see any bargain for the people at those rates and kept up his fight.

* * *

Age in a hurry: At the Pennsylvania terminal, your correspondent overheard an argument between a snappily dressed woman who looked to be well past seventy despite the work of an efficient beauty specialist, and two equally snappily dressed young women, who were apparently her granddaughters. At any rate, the older woman was all put out because her family had insisted that she go down to Florida by train instead of by plane!

* * *

Fooling chiselers: New York city policemen who take the examinations for sergeants now must pay a fee of $5. Up until a short time ago, there was no charge. A check revealed that a lot of cops who took the examinations really had no hopes of passing but had discovered that fooling around with lead pencils and papers for a day or so was a lot easier than walking beats. Incidentally, policemen not only have to buy their own revolvers but the ammunition they shoot in practice and at crooks as well.

* * *

Factual matter: The reason the great seal of the city of New York bears two flour sacks is that once upon a time local millers had a monopoly on bolting all the flour exported from this country. The reason for the two beavers is that there was a time when New York city was the fur trading center of the New World.

Pistols Found in Tree Believed of Civil War

It was believed the weapons about sixty or seventy years old, were placed in the crotch of a sapling during the Civil war times.

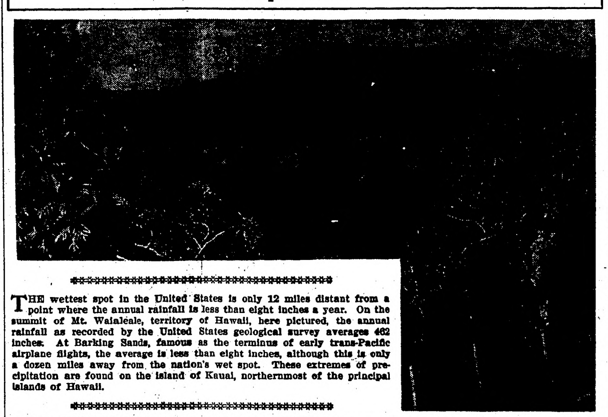
Newshound Gets His Story as Promised

Paris, Texas.—E. L. Rawlins of this town is always nice to the reporters.

So when he was talking to a newshawk from a local paper, he remarked: "Well, I am going to have a little break for you before long, and while it cannot be officially announced right now, I'll be telling you about it in a little while."

Saying which, Rawlins started down the courthouse steps, fell, broke his left wrist.

Here's Wettest Spot in the United States



THE wettest spot in the United States is only 12 miles distant from a point where the annual rainfall is less than eight inches a year. On the summit of Mt. Waialeale, territory of Hawaii, here pictured, the annual rainfall as recorded by the United States geological survey averages 462 inches. At Barking Sands, famous as the terminus of early trans-Pacific airplane flights, the average is less than eight inches, although this is only a dozen miles away from the nation's wet spot. These extremes of precipitation are found on the island of Kauai, northernmost of the principal islands of Hawaii.

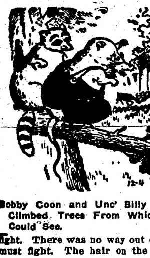
BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE GREAT FIGHT

DOWN from the top of the ridge back of the pond of Paddy the Beaver plunged Lightfoot the Deer, his eyes blazing with rage. He had understood the screaming of Sammy Jay. He knew that somewhere down there was the big stranger he had been looking for.

The big stranger had understood Sammy's screaming quite as well as Lightfoot. He knew that to run away now would be to prove himself a coward and forever disgrace himself in the eyes of Miss Daintyfoot. He must fight. There was no way out of it; he must fight. The hair on the back of his neck stood up with anger just as did the hair on the neck of Lightfoot. His eyes blazed. He bounded out into a little open place by the pond of Paddy the Beaver and there he waited.



Bobby Coon and Unc' Billy Possum Climbed Trees From Which They Could See.

Meanwhile Sammy Jay was flying about in the greatest excitement, screaming at the top of his lungs: "A fight! A fight! A fight!" Blacky the Crow, over in another part of the Green Forest, heard him and took up the cry and at once hurried over to Paddy's pond. Everybody who was near enough hurried there. Bobby Coon and Unc' Billy Possum climbed trees from which they could see and at the same time be safe. Billy Mink hurried to a safe place on the dam of Paddy the Beaver. Paddy himself climbed up on the roof of his house out in the pond. Peter Rabbit and Jumper the Hare, who happened to be not far away, hurried over where they could peep out from under some young hemlock trees. Buster Bear shuffled down the hill and watched from the other side of the pond. Reddy and Granny Fox were both there.

For what seemed like the longest time, but which was for only a minute, Lightfoot and the big stranger stood glaring at each other. Then, snorting with rage, they lowered their heads and plunged together. Their antlers clashed with a noise that rang through the Green Forest and both fell to their knees. There they pushed and struggled.

It was a terrible fight. Everybody said so. If they hadn't known before, everybody knew now what those great antlers were for. Once the big stranger managed to reach Lightfoot's right shoulder with one of the sharp points of his antlers and made a long tear in Lightfoot's gray coat. It only made Lightfoot fight harder.

Back and forth they plunged and the ground was torn up by their feet. Both were getting out of breath and from time to time they had to stop for a moment's rest, still with their heads together. Then they would push and shove and strain again more fiercely than ever. Never had such a fight been seen in the Green Forest.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SALAD DRESSINGS

THE basic dressing which is more used than any other is french dressing. Prepared with a sweet, fresh olive oil there is no dressing more appetizing. One may use any of the table or salad oils in place of the olive if preferred. Take six tablespoons of oil, two of vinegar or lemon juice, one teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of white pepper or a few dashes of cayenne. Beat thoroughly until well mixed. Adding a small piece of ice will hurry the mixing. For a sauce to serve with cold meats and tongue use:

Worcestershire French Dressing.

Add to the french dressing one and one-half tablespoons of worcestershire sauce, beat well. For any green salad, add two tablespoons of chili sauce to the french dressing with a teaspoon of minced onion or one-fourth teaspoon of onion juice.

Southern French Dressing.

To the riced yolks of two hard cooked eggs, add one teaspoon of minced green pepper. Serve with meat, vegetable or fish salad, with the french dressing.

Pickled Onion French Dressing.

To the french dressing add one-half teaspoon of dry mustard, mixed with the salt and two tablespoons of finely minced pickled onions. Serve on fish or meat salads such as tongue or corned beef.

Chiffonade Dressing.

Add to the french dressing one tablespoon of pimiento, one-half tablespoon of parsley and one hard cooked egg, all finely minced.

Savory French Dressing.

To the french dressing add one-half teaspoon of onion juice or minced chives, one teaspoon of minced parsley, one tablespoon of chow-chow, mix well and serve on asparagus tips, cucumber or any vegetable salad.

TRY THIS TRICK

By PONJAY HARRAH

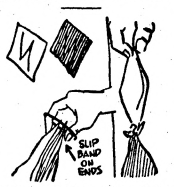
SELF-TYING HANDKERCHIEFS



THIS trick is both quick and startling. The magician begins by borrowing two handkerchiefs. He tosses them in the air. As they fall, the magician catches one of them.

The spectators are amazed to see that the second handkerchief has tied itself to the first. The magician is holding one, with the other dangling from it.

To conclude the wizardry, the magician passes his hand over the knot, which promptly disappears. The handkerchiefs are returned to their owners.

Though surprising, this trick is easily performed. The magician has a small rubber band over one thumb and forefinger. He slips the rubber band over a corner of each handkerchief.

When the handkerchiefs are tossed and caught, they appear to be tied together. The supposed knot is vanished by stroking the handkerchiefs and drawing away the rubber band.

WAITING FOR A RAINBOW

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WAITIN' in the rain for a rainbow,
Sighin' in the dark for the dawn,
Hopin' for the weather
To change altogether,
Waitin' for the rain to be gone—
That'll never get you very, very far.
That'll only leave you settin' where you are,
Weather gettin' wetter,
Nothin' gettin' better—
No, you'll never get there, that is pretty plain,
Wishin' for a rainbow, just waitin' in the rain.

Workin' in the rain till a rainbow
Brightens up the gray of the sky,
Even when it's rainin'
To work uncomplainin',
Waitin' for the clouds to go by—
That'll always get you farther on your way,
That'll make a pleasure out o' ev'ry day,
Heaven gettin' brighter,
Labor gettin' lighter—
Only way to get there, that is purty plain,
Not waitin' for a rainbow, but workin' in the rain!

Humming Birds Can't Walk

Humming birds have tiny feet but can't walk. They can slide along a branch but cannot move as much as an inch. If they want to travel that distance or more they fly up and then down to the desired spot. When they fly they pull their feet in, like a streamlined airplane, cutting down wind resistance.

Justice Has to Fine Wife $10 for Speeding in Car

Earl A. Freeman, justice of the peace of Yuma, Ariz., fined his wife $10 for speeding. "I've known your husband for a long time and he sought to teach members of his family to drive carefully and observe all traffic laws," Judge Freeman said. "Your fine will be ten dollars." "Is this mine or your ten dollars?" he asked when she paid. "Yours," she replied, "I'll get another one tonight."

Cucumbers eight inches long—no more, no less; solid red beets; carrots that are practically coreless; rust-resistant snapdragons. Just a few of our achievements!

Year-in, year-out, new strains, adapted to varying soil and climate conditions, are being developed . . . existing quality is being improved and protected. Cause of Record Floods Assigned to Topography

Deep, Crowded Valleys Helpless Victims of Rivers.

Washington.—"Record floods, causing enormous property damage in western Pennsylvania and western Maryland, call attention to the peculiar topography of these regions, where the industrial and commercial sections of the largest cities are crowded along steep river banks in narrow valleys," says the National Geographic society.

"When excessive rainfall and melting snow raise the headwaters of the principal streams, floods follow with terrifying suddenness in such closely walled rivers as the Monongahela, Youghiogheny, Allegheny, Beaver, Conemaugh, the upper Ohio, and the upper Potomac.

"With no lowlands and almost no islands to spread upon and lose force, flood waters quickly attain destructive velocities that sweep everything before them. Bridges, houses, and even fair-sized buildings often become water-borne battering rams to knock down other bridges, houses and buildings.

Industries Near River.

"In the Pittsburgh district, in particular, floods are dreaded because most of the important electric-light, water-purifying, and gas plants are crowded close to the rivers, and essential services often break down when rising waters flood basements, extinguishing boilers or crippling machinery.

"Nearly all the largest industries, including steel, tin plate, and aluminum mills, glass works, packing, fuel oil, and coal storage plants, have their properties on the river banks or very close to them. Shutdowns mean loss of employment and of income to thousands of workers.

"Experience has taught the railroads to raise their rights-of-way higher than valley floors, but in a few places they are low enough to be reached by such floods as that of the past week. In pioneer days the chief turnpikes of western Pennsylvania were built along the crest of ridges that mark the level of the original plateau, but recently many important roads have been built in the valleys, sandwiched into a narrow ledge between railroads and steel plants, or on slag fills at the very edge of the streams. These fills have further narrowed the rivers, and increased flood hazards.

"While the newer residential districts of such cities as Pittsburgh, Johnstown, McKeesport, Homestead, East Pittsburgh, Braddock, Morgantown, and Cumberland are in the hills, the business districts, and the crowded older residential districts, are all within the reach of flood waters. About once a decade basements are flooded and river shipping endangered. The principal menace, even in times of minor floods, however, is to health, because rising river waters back up the sewers and sometimes contaminate drinking water.

Thickly Settled Valleys.

"During a flood about ten years ago a newspaper in McKeesport, Pa., had to put reporters, linotype operators, and other employees to work hurriedly removing huge rolls of newsprint stored in the basement. If the rising water had reached this paper, the rolls would have swelled and wrecked the building.

"One of the contributing factors to floods in western Pennsylvania is the growth of towns and cities, thus diminishing the number of trees and shrubs that help the soil to retain moisture. Whole hillsides along the Monongahela, also, have been nearly denuded of verdure by overcutting and by constant clouds of acrid fumes and smoke from industries in the valley. The valleys are thickly settled, and rainwater flows rapidly from roofs and paved streets into sewers and rivers.

"Although there are a number of government dams in the Ohio, Monongahela, and the Allegheny, they are low structures, used principally to provide a sufficient depth for the heavy barge traffic on these streams."

Professor Presents New System of Stenography

Palo Alto, Calif.—Based on what psychologists call "kinesthetic perception," Dr. J. Edgar Coover, professor of psychology at Stanford university, has invented a new shorthand and typewriting system which he believes will revolutionize present day stenography.

The new shorthand, which will be known as "notescript," is made up of consonants with dots and dashes for the vowels. While not as short as systems now in use, Doctor Coover declares, tests have demonstrated it can be translated quickly from code without difficulty.

The typing system is based on a sense of position rather than on sight and touch. The student learns a different finger position for each key before he touches a typewriter, and when actual practice starts his fingers fall naturally into position.

Doctor Coover declares the system is applicable to all individuals, regardless of physical differences.

Canary Singing Tourist; Takes a 14,400 Mile Trip

Fremont, Neb.—Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Morehead had nothing but praise for their canary as a traveling companion after their return from a 10,400-mile motor tour. The bird, they reported, sang all the way and even entertained guests at restaurants where they stopped.

Want More Laughs in Shakespeare's Plays

Temesvar, Rumania.—William Shakespeare had better keep away from this section in the future unless he puts more laughs into his plays.

Peasants of a nearby village who were disappointed in the comedy in the famous tragedy, King Lear, said that unless the author keeps his distance, "we will not guarantee his safety." They interrupted the performance "because there was nothing to laugh at."

Amid shouts and jeers the director sent an actor before the curtain to present himself as Mr. Shakespeare, the author, who would attempt to explain his play.

"You are a crook to write works which do not give good laughs for our good money," the furious peasants shouted at the actor. He left the stage hurriedly.

Forest on Pacific Isle Seeded by Planes in 1929

San Francisco.—CCC officials, returning from Honolulu, report the discovery of a mystery forest on the Island of Kauai.

CCC workers were engaged in building trails in Waimea canyon on the island when they came upon a forest of thousands and thousands of young trees on terrain where all previous expeditions showed that no forests existed. The trees were of the karaka variety which is native to New Zealand and not to Hawaii.

An investigation of the mystery developed the fact that in 1929, the United States army tri-motor Fokker "Bird of Paradise," which made the first non-stop flight from the United States to Hawaii, had scattered the territory with seeds from the air.

At that time many mountain regions of the islands difficult to reach on foot were planted from airplanes through army co-operation with the territorial forestry board, but little, if any attention had been paid afterward to the results.

Pocket Electrical Device Purifies Water Efficiently

Leipzig.—A convenient pocket electric apparatus purifies water quickly and efficiently. The contrivance, which is readily portable, consists of two silver electrodes, a staff lamp casing and a pocket lamp cell.

The electrodes are immersed in the water to be purified and the current turned on for one minute. It is only necessary to renew the battery every three months. The new apparatus, demonstrated at the Leipzig fair, assures virtually perfect catadyne sterilization.

Science Tries to Extract Drinking Water From Air

Sydney, N. S. W.—A German scientist, Dr. Wolf Klaphake, has arrived in Australia with a plan to extract enough water from the air to keep sheep alive during dry months in arid parts of the country.

Water, he believes, could be extracted from the air with the humidity as low as 50 per cent.

Doctor Klaphake has not divulged his process, but he says that it is non-electrical and is simple to operate.

EARLY MARRIAGE IS ADVOCATED BY EASTERN SAVANT

It's the comrade instinct that makes marriages endure, and couples who marry in their early twenties have a better chance for wedded bliss than those who wait, says Prof. Maurice A. Bigelow, director of Columbia university's institute of practical science research.

The comrade instinct is strongest at the age when the adolescent is coming into adulthood, he says, and it is then that most persons form the comradeships which last a lifetime, including those which take the form of successful marriage.

Early marriage, however, can be urged too far, Professor Bigelow warns. Young people, under the present easy marriage laws, he says, may be carried on a wave of emotion to a hasty, ill-advised choice.

Yet even this wave of emotion (some call it love) seems to be a fairly trustworthy guide to selection of a congenial partner, he thinks.

"There is no mystery about why marriages sometimes break up," he declares. "Husbands and wives scrap with each other for the same reasons that men and women scrap with other persons. Mankind is a scrappy lot."

The preventive is adjustment—compromise and mutual sacrifice, he says. This is easier for young people than for older persons set in their ways, and that's why, according to Professor Bigelow, those interested in success of the family advocate early marriage where it is economically possible.

Do children help preserve marriage?

"Yes—and again, no," says Professor Bigelow.

The interest of parents in their children may hold together an otherwise shaky marriage—at least until the children are grown and able to support themselves, he says.

On the other hand, a mother may become so interested in her child that she forgets about her husband—one of the first steps toward a marital rift.

Mental Freaks

Persons with certain amazing mental faculties are often very backward in other ways. For instance, there lives in Edinburgh a middle-aged man who can work out sums which occasionally trouble the greatest mathematicians. Now and again they write to him enlisting his help, for they know from experience that his calculations are never wrong. Yet this mathematical genius is unable to tackle even the simplest tasks in other spheres and cannot even feed himself!

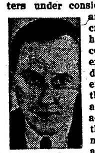
Congressmen Hurrying With Tax and Relief Programs—Black's Committee Wins a Decision—Distracting Rivalries in European Diplomacy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

CONGRESS settled down to earnest work that would clear the way for early adjournment, the two chief matters under consideration being taxes and relief. Democratic members of the house ways and means committee worked in executive session to draw up the new revenue measure which they expect will yield about $799,000,000 in additional taxes during the next year. The minority members stayed away, scornfully asserting their presence was useless because the preparation of the measure was utterly partisan. Representative A. P. Lamneck of Ohio, Democrat, was insistent on his plan to raise $500,000,000 by a flat 20 to 22 per cent tax on corporation income. To produce $263,000,000 more and bring his plan nearly up to the money requirement outlined by President Roosevelt, Lamneck would repeal the present exemption of corporation dividends from the normal income tax rate. On that, he was in agreement with the committee program.



Harry L. Hopkins

Harry L. Hopkins, head of the WPA, appeared before a subcommittee of the house appropriations committee, also in executive session, to urge compliance with President Roosevelt's request for an additional billion and a half to finance relief in the 1937 fiscal year. Various committee members at once demanded that Mr. Hopkins tell what had been done with the $4,800,000,000 granted last year. He was said to have promised to do his best to satisfy them, but Chairman J. P. Buchanan warned the minority members that "this is not to be made into an investigation."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, happy and well tanned, wound up his fishing cruise in the Bahamas and returned to Washington. He landed at Fort Lauderdale and boarded his special train at once, being accompanied for a time by Governor Sholtz of Florida and James A. Moffett who may be appointed assistant secretary of the navy to succeed the late Henry Roosevelt. Governor McNutt of Indiana, possible keynoter of the Democratic convention, went up from Miami to greet the President.

On the way to Washington Mr. Roosevelt stopped for half a day at Warm Springs, Ga., to look at his farm and take a swim in the resort pool. Passing through part of the region devastated by the recent tornadoes, he received reports from eyewitnesses along the route.

SENATOR BLACK'S lobby committee won a considerable victory in the District of Columbia Supreme court when Chief Justice Wheat refused to enjoin the committee from using the telegrams from and to William R. Hearst which had been seized. The judge held that the court had no jurisdiction over the committee, and said he could not see that the freedom of the press was in any way involved. Said his honor:

Senator Black

"I have not been informed yet of any case in which any court has assumed to dictate to a committee of the senate what it should do and what it should not do, and I do not feel that I have any right to inaugurate any such principle as that."

Elisha Hanson, counsel for Mr. Hearst, announced that he would appeal from the decision, and it was certain that the case would ultimately be taken before the United States Supreme court.

Continuing its investigation, the Black committee heard the testimony of Fred G. Clark of New York, national commander of the Crusaders. Mr. Clark denied that the organization had ever engaged in lobbying, and declared that it had assailed the methods of lobbyists in a national radio broadcast.

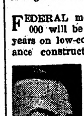
Senator Black endeavored to show that the Crusaders, the American Liberty league, the Sentinels of the Republic, the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution, the American Taxpayers' league, the National Economy league, and similar organizations opposed to the New Deal were supported largely by the same small group of wealthy industrialists. One of his investigators put in a list of contributors to two or more of the groups named. Mr. Clark obtained permission to include in the record a list of hundreds of small contributors, who sent in sums ranging from $1 up in response to the radio program.

MUSSOLINI'S African adventure and Hitler's Rhineland doings and future intentions, tangled together, have created a situation that seemed to imperil the formal friendship between Great Britain and France. The British were insisting that Italy be curbed, that her use of poison gas in Ethiopia be taken up by the League of Nations and that peace negotiations between Italy and Ethiopia be opened quickly to forestall any attempt by Premier Mussolini to sign a settlement which might rise from ruins of Haile Selassie's Ethiopian empire. Foreign Secretary Eden indicated the British were determined to make peace progress "before we leave Geneva," Britain reserving its decision as to what to do next if this conciliation effort failed.

The conciliation committee of the league was making little or no progress, and in Rome Mussolini told his cabinet that Ethiopia's armies should and would be "totally annihilated." His own forces, meanwhile, were moving rapidly toward Dessye and Addis Ababa.

France was reverting to her former policy of letting Italy go ahead with its African conquest, devoting her attention mainly to Germany and central Europe. The British continued to treat all that in a conciliatory way, which disgusted the French. Premier Sarraut handed in his government's reply to the Hitler settlement proposals, submitting in return its own plan. This demanded that Germany keep "hands off" the rest of Europe for 25 years, renouncing her apparent intentions of action against Austria, Danzig and Memel, and claims for colonies. It submitted a French peace plan based on "collective security" with regional mutual assistance pacts backed by an international army directed by a commission working through the league.

FEDERAL money totaling $976,000,000 will be spent in the next four years on low-cost rent and slum clearance construction projects, provided the administration's housing bill, introduced by Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, is passed by congress. Mr. Wagner hopes it will be put through during the present session.



Sen. Wagner

The measure is a compromise of the many proposals made by the various relief and housing agencies of the New Deal and was drafted after a series of conferences with President Roosevelt. It would create another bureau, with five directors, including the secretary of the interior in his ex officio capacity, receiving $10,000 salaries.

The authority would be empowered to make grants not to exceed 45 per cent of the total cost and loans for the remainder to any public housing agency for the acquisition of land and the construction of "low-rent" housing projects. The loans would be repayable over a period not to exceed 60 years, at such rates of interest as the authority decreed.

FLYING through a fog on its way to Pittsburgh, a Transcontinental and Western Air liner went far out of its course, plowed through the forest seven miles southeast of Union City, Pa., and smashed into a granite wall on Chestnut Ridge. Nine passengers and the two pilots were killed. The stewardess, Miss Nellie Granger, managed to drag one man and the sole woman passenger from the flaming wreckage, bound up their wounds, ran four miles to a farmhouse from which she telephoned to Pittsburgh the news of the disaster, and then returned to the scene to care for the survivors until a rescue party could arrive. The pilots were flying on a radio beam, and it was believed their radio apparatus failed. At this writing there is no other explanation.

SOMETHING new in Spanish history took place in Madrid. The parliament, by a vote of 238 to 5, ousted Niceto Alcala Zamora from the office of president of the republic. This action, accomplished by a coalition of Socialists, Communists, Left Republicans and ten minor groups, was taken on a Socialist motion that the president had acted illegally in dissolving the last parliament before the elections and that therefore he should be expelled from office. Back of this motion, however, lay radical sentiment that Zamora, in using his power according to personal whim, has hampered the progress of the "republican revolution."

Diego Martinez Barrio, speaker of parliament, was made temporary president to serve until elections are held.

RUSSIA has rejected China's protest against the soviet-Outer Mongolian mutual assistance pact, but asserted the treaty does not signify any territorial claim by the Soviet union over China or Outer Mongolia. The Russians believe that Japan plans to set up puppet states in North China and Inner Mongolia and then to seize Outer Mongolia.

The Manchukuo government gave out details of a bloody battle between Manchukuans and Outer Mongolians in which the latter were repulsed, losing six bombing planes and some tanks.

Girl Home Too Late, Police Back Story

Houston, Texas.—Detective P. Y. Snow listened while a pretty seventeen-year-old schoolgirl told how a burglar entered her home by cutting a screen. The family also listened.

Snow, however, found dainty footprints outside the window. Alone with the officer, the girl said she was the burglar because her father ordered her to be home at 10 p. m. nightly.

"I didn't get in until 11:30," she said. "Don't tell papa."

Snow co-operated.

"DEATH'S JUNKMAN" HUNTS FOR "DUDS"

French Firm Digs for Unexploded Shells.

Coucy-Le-Chateau, France.—Eighteen years after the World war, unexploded shells still are being found in the war zone.

Reconstruction virtually is over, the farmers have nearly conquered the stubborn lines left by the trenches, but the service which hunts and destroys shells is still at work. For the first 12 years army engineers did the job. Then it occurred to someone to give the concession to a private company which would pay for the recovered metal.

Six years ago "death's junkman" came into being, with quarters in Coucy-le-Chateau, near the emplacement of the "Big Bertha" which shelled Paris. The concern has a museum of particularly rare pieces (unloaded), the biggest exhibit being a 420-millimeter shell.

Besides doing its own hunting, the company is informed of the accidental finding of shells. It sends its special trucks, fitted for handling explosives, and the shell is taken to the exploding ground of Saint-Aubin, near Coucy, or to a larger property at Heurtebise, near the Chemin des Dames. At the latter field two years ago one of the trucks upset, and the resultant explosion broke windows in four surrounding villages. The driver wasn't scratched.

How much latent death still is hidden under the soil of France may be deduced from the figures of the company's six-year activity. In that time it has responded to 4,320 reports of found shells, which have led to its trucks bringing in 1,450,000 tons of "duds." During the same period it has destroyed where they were found another 167,000 tons of shells considered non-transportable. And still undestroyed at its two fields are 236,794 tons of shells.

The company has not lost a man.

Hearts of Dead Made to Beat Again by Physician

Detroit, Mich.—Human hearts made to beat again after their owners had died were seen on the moving picture screen by members of the American College of Physicians here.

The hearts were revived—unfortunately too late to do their owners any good—by Dr. William B. Kountz of Washington university, St. Louis, Mo. Doctor Kountz's object is to learn more about human hearts and how they function both in health and sickness so that he and other doctors will know how to keep hearts beating in sick persons and just what medicines to use for various ailments of heart and blood vessels.

So far Doctor Kountz has succeeded in making 63 hearts beat after removing them from the bodies of persons who died. Of these, 15 developed regular heart pumping mechanisms and went on beating for an hour or more. With 15 of the hearts Doctor Kountz had the lungs attached and these kept on beating outside the body for as long as four hours.

The hearts were taken from persons of all ages from babies born dead to an adult seventy-three years old. Hearts from persons who died of a chronic illness could as a rule be revived more easily than those from persons who died of acute infections. Hearts from tuberculosis patients were easiest of all to revive. Children's hearts responded more readily to Doctor Kountz's efforts than adults' hearts. Hearts from persons dying of heart disease were the hardest to start beating, with the single exception of the hearts from those who died of a heart ailment that was present when they were born.

Obey traffic laws. Cooperate with troffic officers. Traffic regulations often seem burdensome, but remember, the main purpose of them is to save lives and prevent injuries.

It is so easy to criticize the traffic officers and try to make fun of him. It is so easy to criticize the law enforcement agencies as well as the civic bodies that built these ordinances that regulate our driving. All these restrictions were put into law because we as automobile drivers could not regulate ourselves We violated all principles of decency and courtesy; therefore, it became necessary for the states, the counties, the cities, and the villages to pass laws and force us into certain regulations. Now that we have these requirements, let us obey them and prevent accidents thereby. Safe driving today demands obedience and cooperation.

Your Creamery

The Creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw the need of co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of this community. Work and boost for it. The more you patronize it the greater your profits will be. Your creamery is worthy of your most loyal support.

1935 Creamery Honor Roll

As it has been customary for us to publish an annual list of high butterfat producers each year, we will do so again this year as there are a number of patrons that look foward to this report to see how they rank with their neighbor in butterfat production.

This year we see a patron at the top that has not held first place before and that is Fred Steinhauer. He leads by about one thousand pounds. It is a number of years since any one patron produced well over the four thousand pound mark, but from the looks of things so far this year it is hard to predict just who will lead the parade for 1936 with so many running neck and neck. It is still a ?

You will notice that this list has grown considerably since last year. In 1935 there were sixty eight patrons that produced 1500 pounds or more of buttefat as compared with the 45 patrons for 1934. This shows good cooperation on the part of the farmers in this community and of the village as well. If we do not work together we could not accomplish what we have. I therefore want to thank each and every one for your loyal support to the creamery.

Resettlement Project Opens

The area tributary to Thief River Falls will be the scene of a rural resettlement project involving an ultimate expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 if present plans of the federal administation are carried out, it was announced recently by Ralph Nowell, regional director in St. Paul, and J. W. Taylor, project manager in Thief River Falls.

The projected undertaking, one of two to be instituted in Minnesota, calls for the purchase by the resettlement administra- of a maximum of 125 tracts of farm lands without buildings, ranging in area from 80 to 160 acres. The farms will be modernized and improved with sets of buildings before families are settled an them, and long time contracts will enable the farmers to repay the cost without undue difficulty. The second project will be located in the vicinity of Litchfield.

Mr. Taylor emphasized that carrying out of the project is contingent, among other factors, on being able to acquire the lands at a reasonable figure, and he suggested that the land owners list their tracts at once in his office in the basement of the Auditorium at Thief River Falls. Three Federal Land bank appraisers and two negotiators, he said, will arrive May 1 to take over the work of completing the purchases.

The farms, when acquired, will be occupied by farmers from submarginal areas, renters who have been displaced and former farmers now living in small towns. No buildings will be erected on the farms until next year, Mr. Taylor said, owing to the fact that the lands in the majority of cases, are already leased for the current year. It is planned, he said, to construct the buildings with labor supplied by the works progress administration.

Mr. Taylor stated that this community was selected as the location for the project because of the highly developed type of diversified farming that prevails in this section. The territory to be considered in the purchase of lands includes that tributary to sorrounding villages in the region of Thief River Falls.

High School To Give Play

No Father to Guide Them is an extremely amusing play. George Radford, age 22, has had all the family burdens thrust upon him by the recent death of his father, an ingenious inventor. Mrs. Radford seems quite incapable of holding George's brother, Martin, and sister, Clara in check. Martin even attempts to take George's girl, Elsa Manning, but finds it impossible to woo her without his shirt and tie. Tim Manning discover that Mr. Radford's eccentric inventions help him when he comes in contact with Mr. Hargreaves, and, also to put the Radford family back on their feet.

George Radford is taken by Joe Moline; Elsa Manning, Marilyn Oakey; Elsa Radford, Beatrice Larson; Tim Manning, Elmer Doran; Martin Radford, Harlan Knutson; Alice Manning, Lorna Peterson; Mrs. Radford, Eleanor Peterson; and Mr. Hargreaves, Glenn Carlson.

End Of Story In This Issue

We are this week publishing the last chapter of the serial story "Shifting Sands". We are sorry to have kept you waiting for this but, due to an error on the part of the company we purchase our news service from, chapter 16 was run twice and the last one left out. However they are more than glad to correct this and also give you the second installment of the new story, "Synthetic Gentleman" this week.

Ludvig M. Larson and family who have for the past many years farmed the old A. Arnevik farm east of town, moved to a place near St. Hilaire last week. Mr. Larson sold his farm recently to Wm. Paskewitz.

Mrs. S. H. Nohre and family and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nohre visited at the O. H. Nohre home on Sunday.

We are this week advertising a big farm sale for Theodore Schenkey at Middle River. Read his ad on the back page.

GAS, GAS ALL THE TIME, CAN'T EAT OR SLEEP

"The gas on my stomach was so bad I could not eat or sleep. Even my heart hurt. A friend suggested Adlerika. The first dose I took brought me relief. Now I eat as I wish, sleep fine and never felt better."—Mrs. Jas. Filler.

Adlerika acts on BOTH upper and lower bowels while ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only. Adlerika gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old, poisonous matter that you would not believe was in your system and that has been causing gas pains, sour stomach, nervousness and headaches for months.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, reports: "In addition to intestinal cleansing, Adlerika greatly reduces bacteria and colon bacilli."

Give your stomach and bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and chronic constipation. Sold by all druggists and drug departments.

"Julien had saved conscientiously; but Corinne had been extravagant and let the major part of her earnings slip through her fingers. He was now asking how much she had laid aside and to her consternation she found she had almost nothing.

"She was ashamed to face him.

"What could she say?

"She did not know what impulse prompted her to take the jewels. She had never stolen before in all her life. The diamonds had been constantly in her care and it had never occurred to her to appropriate them. It had been a sudden, mad temptation created by the need of money and she had yielded to it without thought. Scarcely were the gems in her possession before she regretted her action and longed to undo it. She would have taken them back had she not feared the consequences. She begged Julien should not be told what she had done. If her crime could be concealed from him she was willing to make any restitution I demanded.

"Perhaps I was a sentimental fool. Anyway I simply could not see it my duty to hand the unhappy creature over to the authorities; destroy Julien's faith in her; wipe out the future she had set her heart upon. I felt if given a chance she would make good.

"Promising I would remain silent, I pocketed the gems and came away.

"Whether I acted rightly or wrongly I do not know.

"I suppose by this time the two are married and on their way to France. I believe Corinne told the truth and that under other influences she will become an excellent wife and mother. At least she has the opportunity.

"The other half of my tale—the half I neither foresaw nor planned—is familiar to you.

"The fog that drove me out of my course; my subsequent shipwreck and illness; the coming of Currier, our old family servant; the chain of circumstances that brought upon me the calamities from which I have just extricated myself—these are an old story. The only thing that now remains to clear my sky is for me to right myself with Marcia."

"That will be easy," smiled Sylvia.

"I wish I thought so," was Heath's moody answer.

"Marcia is no ordinary woman. Her understanding and love are measureless. Love, Mr. Heath, forgives a great deal."

"I know it does. In that lies my only hope."

* * *

She was not in the house when at last Stanley Heath overtook her, but far up the beach tossing driftwood into the surf for Prince Hal to retrieve.

The man paused, watching them.

Hatless, her splendid body aglow with exercise, Marcia had the freedom and wholesomeness of a young athlete. Yet with all her strength and muscular ease, there was a grace unmistakably feminine in her every movement.

When she turned and saw him, she uttered a faint cry, but she did not advance to meet him. Prince Hal did that, racing up the beach, uttering shrill yelps of welcome as he came.

A second and the dog was again at Marcia's side, and in this ecstacy of delight he continued to run back and forth until Stanley Heath had covered the sandy curve that intervened and himself stood beside her.

"Marcia—dearest—I have come back—come to ask your forgiveness. I misjudged you cruelly the night we parted and in anger spoke words I had no right to speak. Forgive me, dear! Forgive me! Can you?"

"I forgave you long ago—before you asked," she whispered.

"Forgave without understanding—how like you! But you must not do that. You have more to forgive in me than you know, Marcia. I have been proud, unbelieving, unworthy of a love like yours. I have made you suffer—suffer needlessly. Listen to what I have to tell and then see if you can still forgive."

Turning, they walked slowly along the shore.

"I could have told you about the jewels and how I came by them at the outset had I not suddenly conceived the idea of teasing you. The plan to conceal my story came to me as a form of sport—a subtle, psychological game. Here I was pitched without ceremony into a strange environment among persons who knew nothing of my background. What would they make of me? How rate me when cut off from my real setting? I resolved to try out the experiment. Women are said to be inquisitive, particularly those living in isolation. My advent could not but stimulate questions. I thought it would be an amusing adventure to circumvent not only your curiosity but also that of the village.

"I placed scant dependence on feminine discernment and constancy.

"When I went to the war, I left behind a girl who pledged herself to love and wait for me. When I came back it was to find her married to my best friend. The discovery shook my confidence in human nature, and especially in women, to its foundations. I derided love, vowing I never would marry and be made a puppet of a second time.

"The remainder of the story you know.

"I stumbled, a stranger, into your home and instantly you set at naught all my preconceived theories of womanhood by believing in me with an unreasoning faith. You asked no questions. You did not even exhibit a legitimate curiosity in the peculiar network of circumstances that entangled me. You were a new type of being and I regarded you with wonder.

"Still, I was not satisfied. I felt sure that if pressed too far your trust in me would crumble and, therefore, I tried deliberately to break it down by throwing obstacles in its pathway. When suspicion closed in upon me I put you to further tests by withholding the explanations I could easily have made. It was a contemptible piece of egoism—selfish and cruel—and dearly have I paid for it. But at least remember that if I caused you suffering I have suffered also.

"For, Marcia, through it all I loved you. I recognized from the moment I first looked into your eyes that a force mightier than ourselves drew us together—a force not to be denied. Nevertheless, so bitter had been my experience I dared not yield to this strange new power. Instead I opposed it with all my strength, giving my love reluctantly, fighting inch by inch the surrender I sensed to be inevitable.

"You, on the other hand, had like myself known betrayal, but you had taken the larger view and not allowed it to warp or mar your outlook on life. When love came knocking a second time, you were neither too proud nor too cowardly to answer it, but freely gave your affection with the gladness and sincerity so characteristic of you.

"I do not deserve such a love.

"Beside the largeness of your nature my own shows itself childish—a small, poor thing for which I blush.

"Help me to erase the past.

"I love you with my whole soul, dear. Everything in me loves you. My life is worth nothing unless you share it.

"Will you?

"Ah, you need not fear, Marcia. Sylvia has told me everything. Beloved, there is not and never has been a barrier to our marriage. We have misunderstood one another. Let us do so no longer.

"I am a free man—acquitted. Come to me and let us begin life afresh."

She came then, swiftly.

As he held her in his arms, the last shadow that separated them melted away.

* * *

Under the glow of the noonday sun, they walked back toward the Homestead, hand in hand.

Sylvia came running to meet them and, throwing her arms about Marcia, kissed her.

"Everything is all right—I can see that," she cried. "Oh, I am so glad—so glad for both of you! I believe I just could not stand it if you were not happy, because I am so happy myself. Hortie is here, you know. Didn't Stanley tell you? Why, Stanley Heath, aren't you ashamed to forget all about Hortie and me? Yes, Hortie came this morning. We're engaged. See my ring!"

"Ring!" repeated Heath. "Mercy on us, Marcia, you must have a ring. I cannot allow this young sprite of a niece to outdo you. I am afraid I was not as foresighted as Mr. Fuller, however. Still, I can produce a ring, such as it is. Here, dear, you shall wear this until I can get something better."

He slipped from his little finger the wrought-gold ring with its beautifully cut diamond.

"I picked this up in India," he said. "I am sure it will fit. Try it, Marcia."

"I—I—do not need a ring," murmured she, drawing back and putting her hands nervously behind her.

"Of course you do," interposed Sylvia. "How absurd! A ring is part of being engaged."

"A very, very small part," Marcia answered.

"Nevertheless, it is a part," the girl insisted. "Come, don't be silly. Let Stanley put it on."

Playfully she caught Marcia's hands and imprisoning them, drew them forward.

On the left one glistened a narrow gold band.

"Jason's!" cried Sylvia. "Jason's! Take it off and give it to me. You owe nothing to Jason. Even I, a Howe, would not have you preserve longer that worn out allegiance, neither would my mother. The past is dead. You have closed the door upon it. You said so yourself. Never think of it again. You belong to Stanley now—to Stanley and to no one else."

As she spoke, Sylvia took the ring from the older woman's hand and held it high in the air.

"The past is dead," she repeated, "and the last reminder of it—is—gone."

There was a gleam as the golden band spun aloft and catching an instant the sunlight's glory, disappeared beneath the foam that marked the line of incoming breakers.

As He Held Her in His Arms, the Last Shadow That Separated Them Melted Away.

"Now, Stanley, put your ring upon her finger. It is a symbol of a new life, of hope, of happier things. Isn't it so, Marcia?"

"Yes! Yes!"

Sylvia drew a long breath.

"There! Now we'll not be serious a minute longer. This is the greatest day of our lives. There must not be even a shadow in our heaven. Kiss, me, Marcia, and come and meet Hortie. Poor dear! He is paralyzed with fright at the thought of appearing into your presence. I left him hiding behind the door. I could not coax him out of the house."

"How ridiculous! You must have made me out an ogre."

"On the contrary, I made you out an enchantress. I told him you would bewitch him. That's why he became panic-stricken. Do be nice to him—for my sake. He really is a lamb."

Sylvia stepped to the piazza.

"Horatio," called she imperiously. "Come out here right away and meet your Aunt Marcia. And please, Stanley, forgive me for mistaking you for a bandit. I'm dreadfully mortified. Still, you must admit circumstantial evidence was strong against you. All of which proves on what shifting sands rest our moral characters!"

"Say rather our reputations, dear child," Heath corrected.

Giant Stingless Honey Bees Gather Sweets From New Sources, Make More

Insect surgery performed with the aid of instruments of precision and microscopes is the basis of an amazing series of experiments designed to revolutionize an industry that is as old as civilization itself. The goal is the creation of a race of giant and stingless honey bees that can gather honey from new sources.

The experiments to create the new wonder honey gatherers are in charge of Jay Smith, a former expert of the United States Department of Agriculture and an internationally known authority on the bee. A generation ago Mr. Smith started as a hobby an apiary consisting of a single hive. Today he has developed at his laboratory near Vincennes, Ind., giant stingless bees that build larger combs and promise to add millions of dollars to the income of the agriculture industry.

Smith is interested in developing a larger and more powerful bee, because, as he explains, larger bees can carry heavier loads and can travel greater distances to search for nectar. Ordinary bees work up to distances of eight and a half miles, but Smith sees no reason why bees that can go twice as far away from the hive cannot be developed.

Scientists of the University of California recently checked up the results of Mr. Smith's experiments on honey bees. The final report indicated that the bees developed by Smith produced 60 pounds more honey than the average of the other swarms; that his queens had 10 additional egg tubes and that a pound of his big bees contained an average of 263 fewer bees than a pound from other swarms. They ran 200 fewer per pound than the famous Caucasians, long known as the giants of the bee family, according to George Randall McCormack in describing Mr. Smith's experiments in Popular Science Monthly.

The following dramatic instance of how the swarm met an emergency took place when a hive was invaded by tiny red ants is related by Mr. Smith:

"The ants," he says, "were too small for the bees to sting. I was interested to know how they would solve the problem. Presently I saw the bees grasping the ants with their feet and flying away with them. Some distance from the hive they dropped them and the next day every one of the invaders had disappeared."

In another emergency which occurred during the great drouth last summer Mr. Smith's bees skillfully protected their honey from the great heat. At that time the temperature at Vincennes reached 110 in the shade. This is above the melting point for wax in the comb.

Mr. Smith watched to see how the bees would protect their stores of honey. All during the heat of the day, he observed the insects bringing water into the hive and allowing it to evaporate. The steady fanning of wings circulated the moistened air and lowered the temperature within the hive.

With a total of 400 swarms at work, Mr. Smith says that he lost less than $5 worth of honey as a result of the heat. The only bees which permitted their combs to drop were those imported from a mild climate where nature had not taught them how to protect their stores.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Faribault—A talk by Mrs. John J. Louis of Minneapolis featured the annual meeting of the Third District Federation of Women's Clubs here. Mrs. Louis compared the problems of modern life to those besetting the nation during Abraham Lincoln's administration.

Gaylord—Political leaders and friends from all parts of the state attended the funeral of Senator Claude H. MacKenzie, Republican national committeeman, here. Business houses were closed for an hour and a half during the services at the home and at the church.

Slayton—With Amy Wessel and A. J. Kittelson, state club agents, in charge, leaders of the 4-H club conference of seven counties met in the Methodist Episcopal church here. Counties included in the conference were Pipestone, Lyon, Rock, Nobles, Jackson, Lincoln, and Murray.

Minneapolis—All Minnesota has its faith placed in Patty Berg as she sailed last week to participate in the Curtis Cup matches at Gleneagles, Scotland, on May 6. Miss Berg, darling of the Florida tournaments this past winter, will team with a host of famous feminine golfers in an effort to down the British aggregation.

St. Paul—Brainerd, Austin, Owatonna, Fergus Falls, Duluth, and St. Paul were the safest towns in Minnesota during the past year. These municipalities received plaques for outstanding work in the war against traffic fatalities. Rice, Big Stone, and Cottonwood counties were awarded first places in their respective divisions.

St. Paul—Arthur E. Nelson, twice mayor of St. Paul, has filed as a candidate for the lieutenant-governor nomination on the Republican ticket. Twenty-nine years old when elected to the mayoralty post, Nelson served two terms, retiring in 1926 to enter private law practice. In 1928 he was the Republican candidate for United States senator from Minnesota.

Minneapolis—George Roscoe, Central high school's greatest athlete in recent years, was honored at a dinner by fellow members of the Central "C" club. Modest Roscoe could hardly speak when asked to tell about his past accomplishments. He was a star halfback on the University of Minnesota national championship football team last fall, and for three years, has been the school's outstanding basketball player.

Rochester—Among famous physicians who will speak at the eighty-third annual meeting of the Minnesota Medical Association May 4, 5, 6, will be Dr. Ferdinand Sauerbruch, Berlin and Dr. Leon Asher, Berne, Switzerland. Dr. Sauerbruch is Geheimrat Professor and internationally know lung surgeon. Dr. Asher, noted physiologist, is professor of physiology at Berne University. Other speakers include: Dr. Donald Guthrie, Sayre, Pa.; Dr. Frederick A. Coller, Ann Arbor; Dr. Elliott P. Joslin, Boston; Dr. Willis Manges, Philadelphia, and Dr. Fred M. Smith, Iowa City.

Mound—A. B. Gilbert of Mound became the first aspirant for the republican nomination for governor to declare himself by filing for the office on April 17. In his statement at the time he urged the convention to use the slogan "to clear away the fog around tax matters including the retail sales tax," to work for non-political police and to fight for the full home market for farmers. Gilbert ran second for the same office two years ago, was an official of the Nonpartisan league until 1924 when he joined the Republican party over the issue of admitting communists to the League and trade unions.

Robbinsdale—Two men were arrested and a huge supply of bootleg liquor was seized as federal authorities raided a large rectifying plant near Robbinsdale. Evidence seems to link the plant with a ring of alcohol law violators who have been using diverted alcohol in the manufacture of gin and other liquors. Bottles of coloring and flavoring were found on the shelves of the plant, while cartons of empty containers and jugs of distilled water were scattered about the floor. The G-men claimed that hundreds of gallons of the bad liquor have been sold to customers through Twin City liquor stores.

Little Falls—A robber who hid in the automobile of a farmer while his car was parked during a shopping expedition escaped the arm of the law, but only after slugging and seriously injuring William Pedley and Leo Deering. Pedley and Deering were on their way home from Little Falls when the robber arose from the back seat, slugged Pedley, and pushed him into a ditch. The attacker forced Deering to drive the machine to a lonely spot where he sought to rob him. Though he had $50 hidden under the rear seat of the car, Deering said he had nothing. The assailant struck him on the head four times and fled.

Brainerd—Striped and pocket gophers and wood-chucks will lead precarious lives this spring and summer. The county board of Crow Wing county has decided to pay bounties again this year on the animals. This means pocket money for rural boys and girls who last year earned $1,564.78 in their hunt for the animals. The county board will pay the same bounties as of last year, 3 cents for ordinary striped gophers, 5 cents for pocket gophers and 10 cents for woodchucks, the bounty being paid during the months of April, May and June.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out.

"I hope not," the Duke replied, grinning broadly, and, seeing that grin, the four servants smiled, too—plainly surprised at the master's good humor.

"This is Evans, sir," the butler continued. "This is Mrs. Mulligan. Cook, sir. And Annie Jeffers, the parlor maid. If you don't mind, sir, I'll get them set, and then I'll come upstairs to report."

"Fine!" said the Duke, calculating that five minutes would get him into his clothes, and out the front door.

He was climbing the steps again when Willetts called.

"I never thought, sir. Your bed isn't made. I'll get the linen out, and have Annie up there right away. You'll want a good fire in your room to dry things out."

"I've got a fire in the library," the Duke replied. "Don't hurry. I'm very comfortable."

They did hurry. He had scarcely got his trousers from under the mattress when Annie appeared, just as he had seen her in the hall, and with a small load of immaculate sheets and pillow cases.

"Mr. Evans is lighting the furnace," she said. "The house is that cold. It's an oil-burner, Mr. Willetts says. I wonder you didn't think of it. But, of course, you're a stranger here, too."

"A stranger!" What did she mean by that? Where had be been, he wondered? Evidently, not home, at any rate. So that was why Willetts hadn't known he wasn't Mr. Ridder. Was Willetts new? The girl was on her knees at the hearth, and the Duke ventured half a question.

"Willetts isn't a stranger?"

"Of course not," Annie replied. "Nor Mr. Evans. Just Mrs. Mulligan and me. We was taken on when Madam and Mr. Ridder expected to spend the summer here, and we'd've been let out, I guess, when they decided to go to Germany, if it hadn't been for your coming back."

"I picked just the right minute, didn't I?" grinned the Duke.

"And "You sure did!" grinned the parlor maid, spreading the linen over the arms of two chairs.

It was an amusing conversation, but it had been too long. Returning to the library, trousers still in hand, Barry Gilbert encountered the ubiquitous Willetts. "I'll take those, sir," said the butler, taking them.

"Oh, never mind!"

"They'll need pressing."

"I'll need them."

"They'll be ready for you in the morning," Willetts said, with a note of finality. "Did you bring any pyjamas, sir?"

Any lie would do for now.

"Yes," answered the Duke, "but, like an idiot, I checked my suit-case, and God knows what happened to the check!"

"I'll get you a pair of your father's," Willetts volunteered. "You're very much of a size." He was taking stock of the new master. "Look like your father, if you don't mind my saying so, sir. Same figure. Same kind of face, only kinder, if you don't mind my saying so, sir."

The Duke didn't mind. It was all "a lucky break," only — how long would it last? "Mustn't over-play my luck," thought the Duke. But the real Mr. Ridder "wasn't coming until tomorrow." Why make a break for it tonight? The storm was roaring, and throwing buckets of water against the windows.

The butler had gone into the bedroom, and returned with a pair of purple silk pyjamas.

"Anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks."

"I'll be leaving you then. There's a lot to do—getting the rooms ready for cook and the maid. They've never been here before. Don't know their way about. Evans don't neither. What time breakfast, sir?"

"Oh, say eight o'clock."

"Right, sir. Good night, sir," said the butler, bowing himself out.

"Easy!" thought the Duke, standing before the fire, with the purple pyjamas in his hand. "Too easy! Too damned easy! There's a catch in it somewhere!"

Willetts implied that he had been with the family some time. Why had he never seen the son? Or even a picture of him? Why was he so willing to accept a stranger in the house at his own word—practically without question? Why did he take those trousers? "I'm trapped," mused the Duke, "or else—"

Or else what?

"Or else he's no more a butler than I am Mr. Ridder. How do I know what he is? There's a lot of mighty valuable junk in this house."

It was with that thought in his mind, and himself imagined in a new and exciting role, that His Grace of Hollywood finally turned the other cheek on an Irish linen pillow slip, and dropped off to sleep.

The trousers were beside his bed when he awoke.

And all that cinema nonsense had evaporated from his mind.

Just "a lucky break." A good night's rest in a warm, dry house, whose owners had suddenly dashed off to Europe, leaving the establishment to a son who happened to be unknown to the servants.

"If I belonged in a house like this—"

He squared his shoulders, and sauntered down the carpeted stairs. No need of finishing the sentence. Already, he felt a new dignity; a new, stiffening self-respect. The trousers were neatly pressed, and "Good morning, sir," said the butler, as he entered the breakfast room.

There was nothing "make shift" about the meal. Evans had been to town for cream, and bacon, and bread, and the Duke's courage rose with every sip of the steaming coffee.

"What's this?" he inquired, his eye falling up an envelope at his plate.

"A letter for your mother, sir," Willetts replied. "It came after she'd left the hotel, and Evans got it when he went back for some things he was to bring out here. He forgot it last night, sir. Mrs. Ridder expected some mail from the employment agency, and places like that. She said you was to open it, sir."

Barry hesitated.

He could feel a chilly something in the butler's gaze.

Sooner than return the gaze, or evade it, he opened the envelope.

A hundred dollar bill dropped out.

"Well, sir!" exclaimed the butler, any doubts he may have entertained lost in his surprise.

"Well," echoed the Duke, with that new courage born of the steaming coffee. "Well, and likewise good. I can use this."

"It's Got to Go," Fumed the White-Haired Gentleman.

"Yes, sir," said the butler. "A little more coffee, sir?"

"Thank you," assented the Duke. "And just one more piece of toast."

Alone in the cheerful breakfast room, with the cheerful sunshine streaming down outside, he read the letter.

> "Dear Mother:
>
> I'm returning the money. I can't keep it, and I can't go to Southampton. I'm sending this special delivery, so you'll have time to get rid of the servants, if you decide not to open the house. For your sake, I hope father improves at Bad Nauheim, but I don't want anything that comes from him, and I sha'n't write again. Thanks, all the same.
>
> John."

The Duke picked up the envelope again.

It had been posted the previous morning in New York, and there was no special delivery stamp.

"Well," he remarked; "Santa Claus is certainly worked overtime for me!"

Back with the toast and coffee, Willetts inquired, "Anything important, sir?"

"The letter?" asked the Duke, as though that had been farthest from his present thoughts. "No. I'll send it to Bad Nauheim when I write, and keep the money until my mother returns."

"What time shall you want the car, sir?"

"The car?"

"For luncheon, sir. It's a fairish long walk to the village."

His Grace reflected. It was a long walk to the village. It was an even longer walk to Montauk Point. And, apparently, there was no possibility of overplaying his luck. Why should not he ride to Montauk in comfort—or, at least, to within a few miles of Montauk — and disappear there, instead of at Southampton?

"I might take a drive," he said.

Out of sight of the house, he took the precaution of burning that letter from "John." The truth was that the Duke's uneasiness over that hundred had nothing to do with the fear of being caught. He had never stolen anything before. "I'll return that money from Montauk," mused the Duke. "I don't want to be hooked for robbing the mails."

Life had never been dull for him—or for his father. "Keep moving"—that was the old man's slogan. And that was all he ever kept. Barry's memories began in Pittsburg. Stranded, Francis Gilbert had tutored there. "Spoiling good longshoremen," he called it, "because their papas are rich." From one of the longshoremen, Barry had discovered that he should have a mother. The old man had never mentioned it, so his son raised the question. "I lost her," his father said.

"How?"

"In Algiers. You were born there."

It was years before Barry was old enough to put the two things together. "Did she die when I was born?" he asked then, and got no answer. This was in San Sebastian, where the old man worked for an engineering concern. Soon afterward, they pushed on to England, and short-lived prosperity. Barry went to school, for the first time, and found that he had learned more from his father than the other lads from their professors. That was fortunate, because the schooling lasted only a year before Barry—fifteen now—was taken to India. "I can't stand counting houses," his father had told him. "They've given us a berth in Calcutta."

It wasn't an upper berth, and it was in another counting house. "I met a fellow today," the elder Gilbert announced, "who's got something to do with the diamond mines. I think we'll go to Johannesburg." They didn't, because, a week later, the old man found another friend who suggested Manila. From there, it was only a step to Canton, and the tea business, and a shorter step to Hong Kong, where Francis Gilbert came home one night with a fever, and died the next morning.

Barry had begged a clerkship in Hong Kong, and then worked his way to San Francisco. On the boat was a movie director. "You've got a great smile," he told the youngster. "I think I can use you." Hollywood, then, and one studio after another. Youth, and looks, and the ingratiating grin helped a lot there. And Barry learned a lot, too. How to wear clothes, and how gentlemen behaved—or Hollywood thought they behaved—in a drawing room. He was earning two hundred dollars a week, sometimes, when a wallet vanished from a coat thrown over a table "in the set." The Duke knew who took it. She was a poor little thing, though, and desperate, and His Grace kept his mouth shut. They couldn't pin it on him, he said, and they didn't, but there were no jobs after that.

And so he'd come East. Ankle-deep in the sand, that morning at Southampton, he kept thinking of the letter he'd just burned. And of his own mother. He had missed her all through his childhood, watching the other boys with their mothers, or, at school in England, getting ready to go home to them. "I lost her," the old man had said, and never mentioned the matter again. Had she died in Algiers, in childbirth, or merely grown weary of wandering, and decided to stay somewhere with someone? "I'd like to find her," the Duke thought.

At noon Evans brought the car.

"Do you know where we're going?" asked the Duke.

"Yes. I'm taking you for a ride."

Almost surly, thought the Duke. And it had a sinister sound, that phrase.

"You want to get lunch, don't you?" the chauffeur added, quickly.

"I want to see the end of the island. We can eat anywhere."

The Duke sank back into the cushioned seat. It gave him a curious sense of importance — being driven like this. Along the highway they sped.

The car was slowing down now, and, looking ahead, His Grace saw another limousine drawn up at the side of the road. Evans threw out the clutch, and then put his foot on the brake.

A husky young fellow in uniform was standing in front of the other car. Beside him was a spare, white-haired gentleman. And, framed in the car's doorway, ready to alight, stood a pretty girl.

"Stop," said the Duke, quite supererogatorily, since they had stopped.

She was the prettiest girl he had ever seen, the Duke decided. He had made the same decision many times before, but this time he felt it would be final. Tall and slim and dark, dressed in an ensemble of hunter's-green tweed, with a top coat to match, and a tiny felt hat perched upon her sleek black hair, she looked, somehow, like a thing turned out by an entirely perfect machine—trim, and polished, and built for speed. Her eyes were gray, the Duke was to discover later, and wide, and a little cold. Her nose was a straight line from her forehead, and her lips were bright red against the pale ivory of her face.

"Can I do anything for you?" inquired the Duke.

He was standing before her now, and her glance took him in, calmly, appraisingly, before she answered, "No, thanks."

And with that, Barry felt, she erased him from the landscape.

"Yes, you can," said the white-haired gentleman. "That is, if either of you knows anything about a car. My chauffeur doesn't."

"We'll be glad to try," the Duke said, cordially. "Have a look at it, will you, Evans?"

Sullenly, Evans walked over to the open hood.

"It's the ignition," the other chauffeur told him.

"Start her up."

"She won't start."

The two men began fussing with the engine.

"It's got to go," fumed the white-haired gentleman. "I haven't had a bite since breakfast, and I'm due in New York at five o'clock."

"Hungry myself," said the Duke. "Where did you mean to eat?"

Dour "Scottie" Wins Right to Bark in Own Back Yard

Megs, pudgy and be-whiskered Scottish terrier, "conducted herself as a perfect lady" in the eyes of Common Pleas Judge Samuel Silbert of Cleveland, and escaped an injunction against a few "yips" in her own back yard. A neighbor in the fashionable Edgewater drive neighborhood, Mrs. Florence Abel, asked an injunction against the dog's "disturbing the peace in the night," pleading aggravation of a serious nervous heart ailment.

The Scottie came into court on a leash. She sat quietly in the lap of her mistress, Miss Betty Stinchcomb, eighteen, during the hearing. Judge Silbert, in denying the injunction, said "the dog conducted herself as a perfect lady in court. She seems inclined to be dull. She is inoffensive and quiet. In fact, she doesn't amount to much."

They had suddenly grown rich and bought a farm complete with hens, cows and pigs. Said a visitor: "Do your hens lay eggs?"

"They can," was the reply, "but in our position they don't have to."

Finds Benefit In Soil Program

If a farmer with two-thirds of his crop land in alfalfa and sweet clover believes it worth while to take part in the federal soil conservation program, other farmers with a lesser proportion of their land in soil-conserving crops should be able to benefit by participating in the program also, says Frank J. Brown, director of information for this program in Minnesota.

Such a farmer, says Mr. Brown, is William Jonasson of Welch township, Goodhue county. Although almost 100 acres of his 160-acre farm in legume crops, Mr. Jonassen has recently shown his interest in the soil program by submitting a worksheet to the county soil conservation committee.

"As I understand the program, it will pay me cash benefits for maintaining my present acreage of legume crops, as well as for any improvement I may make in the land this year," Mr. Jonasson says.

Although the county committee has not yet computed Mr. Jonasson's base acreage, Mr. Brown points out, it is likely that he will be given a base of about 50 acres. This is about the normal acreage of soil-depleting crops, such as corn, oats, barley and flax, he has grown on his farm in recent years. including 1935. Under the program, the largest soil-conserving payment he might obtain would be 15 per cent of his base acreage, or 7½ acres. If his farm is about of the same average productivity as all farms in the United States, his rate of payment will be $10 per acre, or $75 for the 7½ acres. Having seeded down 25 acres of alfalfa with oats or barley last year, harvesting the grain, he will probably be credited with shifting 25 acres from soil-depleting to soil-conserving crops. From this acreage, however, will be deducted 10 acres of old-crop alfalfa he plans to plow up and plant to corn. His net shift, therefore, will be 15 acres (25 minus 10). This is more than enough to qualify him for the $10 payment on 7½ acres.

Having 115 acres in soil-conserving crops this year, he may obtain $115 in secondary, or soil-building payment, ($1 for each acre in such crops) but to earn this he will be expected to carry on certain soil-building practices this year, such as seeding new acreages of legumes, with or without a nurse crop, planting forest trees on crop or pasture land, or applying ground limestone to crop or pasture land at the rate of 2 tons per acre. The rate of payment for these practices varies, but in general is about enough to cover the cost of materials used. Since Mr. Jonasson usually seeds down 15 or 20 acres each year to alfalfa or sweet clover, he might readily obtain a payment of $25 to $35 for continuing this practice. His combined soil-conserving and soil-building payments, therefore, might readily amount to more than $100, without entailing much, if any change in his farming methods.

"In a rolling country such as ours, I believe that a large proportion of the land should be kept in meadow and pasture," Mr. Jonasson says. "The national soil conservation program is directing attention to better farming practices and will pay farmers and land owners for the use of their land while they are improving it.

4-H Club Project Work

Bread right from the oven! Fresh, golden brown loaves and biscuits are a welcome sight to the worker coming in from the field, the shop, the office, or the store. Nine thousand, one hundred and fifty-three girls in Minnesota between the ages of 10 and 20 gave their families many such thrills last year because of the baking they did in their homes as a part of their 4-H club work.

81 4-H members from Marshall county proved last year that baking in the home is not a lost art and that girls today can and do perform tasks in the home as easily and as well as girls of former days. But Miss 1936 has more fun in making her biscuits, her cakes and her muffins because she meets with other 4-H members in her community to learn how to select her ingredients and combine them to the best advantage. Then, too, she works for perfection of product to live up to her 4-H club's motto "To make the Best Better."

Every girl in Marshall county is invited and urged to take part in the bread baking or any of the other 4-H projects for 1936. Get in touch with your County Club Agent, Evelyn Bierbaum, or County Agent, R. A. Reierson at Warren. Depending upon her age or experience in baking, the member may take first, second or third-year bread baking.

First year girls are asked to make: 3 bakings of white bread; 12 bakings of quick breads.

Second-year: 9 bakings of yeast breads; 16 bakings of quick breads.

Third year: 75 pounds of yeast bread; 12 bakings of quick breads; 12 other baked products.

Each member is to keep a cost record and write a story of her work.

Besides the fun and satisfaction of working with other boys and girls in the community on a home task, each member may exhibit her products at county fair and compete for State Fair trips.

4-H Club News

Because of the High School play, the 4-H Club meeting has been postponed to Saturday evening, May, 9th.

The program committee has arranged a health program and a discussion on the Junior Short Course will be held. Let's see all leaders, members and parents present! Lunch will be served.

They must represent families, not necessarily on relief, but in need. If the boys have been in CCC before, they must have stayed there at least four months and have received an honorable discharge.

High School To Give Play

No Father to Guide Them is an extremely amusing play. George Radford, age 22, has had all the family burdens thrust upon him by the recent death of his father, an ingenious inventor. Mrs. Radford seems quite incapable of holding George's brother, Martin, and sister, Clara in check, Martin even attempts to take George's girl, Elsa Manning, but finds it impossible to woo her without his shirt and tie. Tim Manning discover that Mr. Radford's eccentric inventions help him when he comes in contact with Mr. Hargreaves, and, also to put the Radford family back on their feet.

George Radford is taken by Joe Moline; Elsa Manning, Marilyn Oakey; Elsa Radford, Beatrice Larson; Tim Manning, Elmer Doran; Martin Radford, Harlan Knutson; Alice Manning, Lorna Peterson; Mrs. Radford, Eleanor Peterson; and Mr. Hargreaves, Glenn Carlson.

10,000 Lbs Gain In Butterfat

The other day when we had a talk with Walter Larson, local manager of the Farmers Cooperative Creamery, he stated that during the first three months of 1936 the creamery had an increase of 10,000 pounds of butter manufactured over that made in the first three months of 1935.

This is good proof that if all the farmers in the community stick with the creamery in 1936 they will have a new record before the year is over.

BEGIN NATION-WIDE PEACE DRIVE

College Students Conduct Demonstrations; Nye Report Raps Munitions Firms; Peace Plans Advocated

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

THE Gods of war, though they play with the fates of Europe, Africa and the Orient, are feeling their bloody thrones shake a little on the American side these days.

Still rumbling through the land are the thundering accusations of the report of the Nye munitions committee to the United States senate—charges that war scares are planned, started and accelerated by concerns in the international munitions trade, concerns whose representatives have been known to foment wholesale slaughter on the battlefronts, that their profits might be greater.

And now in its closing days is the month-long drive of the Emergency Peace campaign. Speakers and organizations have brought home to millions of Americans the folly of war as a result of this campaign, which was started April 22.

The new "war on war" got under way in a manner fully as spectacular as an old-fashioned recruiting campaign. Leaders in the movement were the young men and women in colleges and universities, with 500,000 of them striking from classes at one time to attend anti-war mass meetings. Several thousand homing pigeons were released from the grounds of the Washington monument, heralding the event and bearing peace messages from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to 300 different cities. Plans were laid for mass meetings to follow in other cities. In Philadelphia the Liberty bell was rung and its sounds broadcast over the radio.

Sounds Campaign Keynote.

From England came an old peace campaigner to sound the opening keynote of the present campaign and to begin a tour of speaking appearances throughout the country on behalf of peace. He was George Lansbury, M. P., former titular leader of the British Labor party in the house of commons. "Uncle George," as he is affectionately known on the other side of the Atlantic, pitched right in with all the fervid enthusiasm for which his speeches are famed.

The Liberty Bell rings for Peace to open drive.

Referring, apparently, to the war clouds brooding over his own hemisphere, he declared that "civilization is at the crisis of its fight." He said that to realize that there was no such thing as "civilized" warfare one need only read the accounts of the war now going on in Africa. He advised that nations co-operate and share the resources of the world, so that conquest would not be necessary for a nation to obtain raw materials for its industries.

"The best case against war is based on the teachings of our Lord and his own sayings," Lansbury said, "and not on what the theologians have put into his mouth. The law of life is not domination, not selfishness, but in people sinking their own selfish lives and finding them in the community."

In the climax of his speech, the white-whiskered Englishman said: "We should call an entirely new world conference, including not only the great powers but India, Egypt, Ceylon and the African peoples, and carry on the work started at the economic conferences of 1927 and 1933."

Asks U. S. Aid Britain.

This was in line with the proposals okehed by the council of the League of Nations after the recent remilitarization of the Rhineland by Nazi Dictator Hitler.

"I want the United States to join my government in Great Britain, and any others, to say to the world: 'Let us give up this nonsensical will-o'-the-wisp of armaments, and say we want to make a new start in dealing with world problems' . . .

"Have we learned enough to give what we have to destroy justice? Have we learned the futility of national wealth? Can we be partners in building a real Christian civilization?"

Various student organizations were quick to take up the challenge. One of them, the "Veterans of Future Wars," chiefly through the appeal admittedly lying in its masterfully-chosen name, already had converted thousands of students to the cause of peace.

But some of the collegiate peace demonstrations proved to be not exactly peaceful.

Disturbing the Peace.

When students of Lawrence college at Appleton, Wis., tried to parade, the police put them to rout by brandishing night sticks, and one parader was injured. In Philadelphia, at Temple university, students, in their enthusiasm, formed a flying wedge and knocked over the speakers' stand. At the University of Kansas a tear gas bomb was set off in the midst of 300 students who were listening to a speech by one of their number; a free-for-all fight ensued.

The size of some of the turnouts is indicated by the following partial list:

Cornell 2,300, University of Cincinnati 1,000 out of 4,946, Vassar 1,000, University of Chicago 1,500 out of 5,700, University of Michigan 3,000 out of 10,500, Dartmouth 1,200, Brown 1,500, Harvard 500, Yale 200 out of 3,000, Tufts 800, Syracuse 800, Buffalo State Teachers 200 out of 400, Lewis institute 400 out of 2,500, Northwestern 400 out of 4,000, University of Rochester 250 out of 800, University of Minnesota 600 out of 12,000, Hamline university 200 out of 600, Lawrence college 400 out of 700, Temple university 200, Milwaukee State Teachers 400 out of 1,255, University of New Mexico 150 out of 1,200, Wayne university 800 out of 10,000 Washington university 300 out of 3,000, Purdue 500 out of 4,000, Depaul 50 out of 1,400, Earlham 50 out of 400, Rockhurst 400, U. The terrible cost of war is graphically illustrated by the Foreign Policy association, in a booklet receiving wide distribution at present. The association declares that the cost of the World war to every family in the United States would buy every family a new car with gasoline to run it for a year; a complete wardrobe for mother, father and two children; a mechanical refrigerator; furniture for the living room; a new radio, and a family ticket to the movies once a week for a year.

Calls Neutrality Impossible.

The association goes on to point out that absolute neutrality is virtually impossible because industries employing 2,000,000 Americans depend greatly upon foreign trade. The organization can see three main policies toward foreign nations which are receiving the greatest approval of various groups: Political isolation and economic expansion; international co-operation; and a strict "keep-out-of-war" policy.

Advocates of the isolation theory seek temporary neutrality legislation and go no farther than embargoes on the export of arms and munitions, while the internationalists would extend these embargoes to all materials used in warfare, including loans and credits to nations engaged in fighting. Internationalists further advocate the delegation to the President of the power of lifting any and all embargoes against a country which has been attacked in violation of the Pact of Paris.

Permanent neutrality legislation is the aim of the "keep-out-of-war" crowd. Its platform contains the following:

"Mandatory embargo on arms and ammunition and other war materials to all belligerents in time of war; the prohibition of loans and credits to warring nations, and strict regulation to forbid American vessels and American citizens from traveling in war zones.

"All trade with belligerents shall be at the risk of the shippers."

These people are willing to give up American freedom of the seas, declaring that the United States has nothing to gain and everything to lose in fighting war in Europe or Asia. The Foreign Policy association says the price of this neutrality will be high, but evidently it thinks not too high.

Total Cost of War.

"Our exports to Europe in the prosperous years from 1926 to 1930 amounted to more than $2,000,000,000. Our exports to Asia came to nearly $500,000,000. Loss of this trade would result in unemployment at home, but the cost of war would be far greater. The World war has cost us $55,000,000,000."

The internationalists, likewise, are willing to forego the traditional freedom of the seas, but they also propose consultation by the United States with other signatories of the Pact of Paris in case of violation of the pact; support of the Pope resolution, providing for United States membership in the League of Nations with the guaranty that this country shall not be required to become party to any action which involves armed force, and American adherence to the World Court. The isolationists oppose these alliances with the League and the Court.

Another argument for peace is the 150,000-word report of the Nye committee, which reveals the bribery and corruption which exists in the international munitions commerce, the resistance to peace efforts and the instigation of war scares by the munitions firms. It even found that it was customary to sell American war patents abroad, where they might be used against American lives and ships in the World war.

The charges were by no means confined to the United States, but also concerned the British arms inquiry now going on. It was charged that both American and British arms firms knew about the first German violations of the arms ban of 1924.

How Arms Salesmen Work.

The committee told how boat manufacturers sold a "considerable battle fleet" to the Chilean government after the World war, stimulating the building of war machines in other countries of South America and causing general unrest on that continent.

One of the most flagrant examples of this was in Colombia and Peru at the time of the Leticia incident, when the munitions firms kept the two countries well informed about each other's operations. One salesman, after selling a big order to Peru, boasted that he would sell "double the amount, and more modern, to the Colombian government."

One piece of evidence quoted a munitions manufacturer as spurring the activities of representatives with the order to get busy because "these opera bouffe revolutions are usually short-lived, and we must make the most of the opportunity." It mattered little that the airplanes, bombs and guns would be used to kill off a few back country Indians in South America.

Here's what the Nye committee has to say about that incident:

"All this may be little more to the munitions people than a highly profitable game of bridge with special attention on all sides to the technique of the 'squeeze' play, but to a considerable part of the world's inhabitants there is still something frightful in death by machinery, and the knowledge that neighboring governments have acquired the latest and fastest engines of destruction leads to suspicion that those engines are meant to be used, and are not simply for play and show."

It was even shown that the president of the Bath Iron Works in Maine, when the $617,000,000 naval bill was before congress, had written a letter to a publisher of a great chain of newspapers, urging him to revive a Japanese war scare that had been thoroughly discredited by the newspaper which started it.

Relief Problem

Washington.—One swallow does not make a summer nor does one statement, even though from a high official, make a condition absolute. But one statement from a high official under the present New Deal relief setup comes rather close to disclosing the transcendent importance of the nation's relief problem in American economy at this time.

I refer to the recent testimony by Harry A. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator and professional reliever, before the house committee on appropriations. He told that group a few days ago that 3,853,000 heads of families or unattached persons were receiving a livelihood for themselves and their families from the federal government on March first of this year. If this be true, and it can hardly be disproved, there are nearly fifteen million persons dependent directly upon federal assistance. And the condition appears even worse when it is shown that about ten million others are receiving assistance from state, county and city relief or charitable organizations. In short, the Hopkins testimony reveals that about twenty per cent of all of our people are living on relief money.

These figures are astounding. They are made the more amazing when one considers that the condition exists even after the New Deal has expended approximately twenty-one billions in its three years of government management, the bulk of the outgo being directly chargeable to what Mr. Roosevelt has consistently maintained was an emergency.

I have reported to you intermittently heretofore the various stages through which Reliever Hopkins has gone in his search for means to solve the relief problem. I have been among those observers here who have felt that even though Mr. Hopkins lacks practical experience in commercial life and even though he casts aside every consideration except those inherent in the minds of a man who has devoted his life professionally to relief work, that he should be given time to solve the problem. It seems to me, however, that he has had ample time to find the answer if he is ever going to provide a solution. Neither he nor President Roosevelt has given any indication yet that they know the answer or even have a clew to it. The net result of their efforts to date has been the expenditure of money in unprecedented amounts and the piling up of a debt, the like of which this country never has known.

Mr. Hopkins has gone about his job smugly and with that apparent complacency that characterizes the official who is convinced that he alone is equipped to do a particular job. By his attitude, he has created in congress a feeling that he thinks he is a superior being and if anything makes a congressman hot under the collar, it is to see a member of the executive branch exhibit a pose that the congressmen are dumbbells. Some of them are, of course, but that is not true of all and it is fast doing Mr. Hopkins no good at all to show arrogance towards the men who go out and campaign directly for the votes of the people.

* * *

Visionary Policy

I said that the relief problem was of transcendent importance in governmental affairs at this time. That is true because I believe the conviction is growing that the whole New Deal policy on relief is impractical and visionary; that it is founded upon a wrong psychology; that it is creating in this nation the greatest mass of panhandlers and "the world owes me a living" type or class of individuals that has ever existed anywhere and that, in addition the men who are doing the job for the federal government lack the ability to understand its whole significance.

As proof of the observations I have just stated, let me point out how the demands for vast expenditures of money and wholesale methods of relief for the destitute have subsided in congress. Time was when a half dozen so-called welfare workers, college professors or organization leaders could get a hearing by the simple crook of a finger before a congressional committee. Such men as Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, and Senator Costigan of Colorado, and the late Senator Cutting of New Mexico, to mention only a few, would weep salty tears in senate speeches; they would call for ten billions for this and five billions for that and other billions for other things and shout that people were starving in the midst of plenty. And they were starving in the midst of plenty, but the shouting and the tumult raised by these political saviors did not provide a solution for the problem. I have a hunch that the silence of such men as these through the last year can mean only that they now see they were off on the wrong foot. They cannot help but realize that their theories were all wet, because Mr. Hopkins certainly has disproved the value of their plans.

Another indication of how congress feels is the movement to divide the billion and a half relief fund, which President Roosevelt asked, between Mr. Hopkins and Public Works Administrator Ickes. The President demanded that congress give the whole fund to Mr. Hopkins. It probably will work out that way eventually but the feeling against Mr. Hopkins cannot be denied. It is violent and only a small part of it has come to the surface.

The congressmen could not afford to see the flow of money cut off in an election year so they maneuvered to spank Mr. Hopkins by seeking to give a portion of the money to Mr. Ickes.

Now, it is currently rumored that Mr. Ickes, who never has liked Mr. Hopkins, has done some lobbying in the fine underground manner of which he is capable. He sincerely believes that the use of funds in the construction of permanent things like buildings, roads and bridges gives the government and taxpayers at least something for their money. But, be that as it may, the ground swell against Mr. Hopkins is very powerful and if Mr. Hopkins possessed any understanding of the science of the times he would see it. Thus far he has given no indication that he understands what it means.

* * *

What's the Answer?

Where will it all end?

The answer to this relief problem is not now near enough to hazard a guess.

Let us go back for a brief review. When President Roosevelt took hold of the relief problem early in his administration, he advanced two theories. They were to solve our problems and solve them quickly. He urged the NRA and the PWA, which with the AAA, formed the first battalion of the alphabetical army. The NRA was designed to regiment business and indirectly force reemployment by the shortening of hours and the spread of work. The PWA was to provide a lot of construction jobs immediately, giving work to those not absorbed in private commerce and industry and thus take up the slack until buying power of individuals had been restored.

By November, 1933, it became quite evident to unbiased observers that NRA and PWA were falling short of the mark. So, out of the Presidential hat came the CWA. Congress promptly provided funds so the Civil Works administration—and here is where professional reliever, Mr. Hopkins, came on the scene—could hire unemployed who had not been absorbed by PWA or had not been restored to jobs in commerce and industry by NRA.

It was not long until CWA was as much in disrepute as the original schemes for providing employment. I believe it was in even greater disrepute because ordinary citizens could see the utter waste and the reckless expenditures of money occurring under CWA for its relief raking and stone gathering and other nonsensical job-creating results. CWA went the way of any unsound proposition.

Forward then came FERA. It was a proposition of emergency relief. Washington writers were deluged with speeches and statements that none should be allowed to starve. The spigots of the treasury were opened wide and $4,880,000,000 gushed forth. In every section of the country, federal money was distributed and distributors in Washington were none too careful of how they passed it out. In parallel lines with FERA, the politicians formed to the right. They saw the money and from precinct to pinnacle of politics, they were on the job and they have been on the job ever since.

* * *

Too Much Waste

Last year, the President became convinced that there was too much waste; that FERA was building up a clientele of millions who were saying, both publicly and privately, that it was no use to work when the government would feed them and he ordered a quick change in course.

With this change in course came a locking of horns between Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes. Mr. Ickes was licked by the simple expedient of a new federal agency. Bounding forth came Mr. Hopkins' own brain child, WPA. While it stands for Works Progress administration, a different name, the initials, to those who have studied the situation, spell FERA and CWA combined.

The President announced to the country that "this business of relief must end." Those who could not be employed must be taken care of by the states and local governments and those who were employable would be taken off relief but they must do work for the funds which the federal government passed out to them. The result has been a considerable mess and there is not a day goes by that congressional mail does not reveal cruel results, absolute destitution and hardship and privation unparalleled in the United States.

Where will it all end?

"This business of relief" is still relief by whatever name the alphabetical agency in Washington may be known. It can be only relief and there can be no doubt that it must be continued.

Although President Roosevelt had demonstrated his willingness to make shifts in his program, it is becoming more and more evident that a fundamental alteration of his whole scheme must be undertaken.

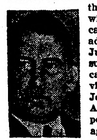
Plans Completed for the Democratic Convention

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY of Kentucky, who was temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1932 and as such delivered the keynote speech, will serve in the same capacity at the Philadelphia convention in June, outlining the issues of this year's campaign as his party views them. Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas will be the permanent chairman again. Yet another repeater will be Former Judge John E. Mack of New York. Four years ago he placed Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination, and he will do it again in June.



Sen. Barkley

These selections were made by the committee on arrangements. Other officers of the convention chosen, are: Lee Barnes of Alabama, chief doorkeeper; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, national committeewoman of the District of Columbia, hostess of the convention, with Mrs. Agnes Collins Dunn of New Hampshire as assistant; Col. Edward C. Halsey, secretary of the senate, sergeant at arms; Representative Clarence Cannon of Missouri, parliamentarian, assisted by Representative John J. O'Connor of New York; W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the convention.

National Chairman Farley said that the two-thirds rule, which has prevailed in Democratic conventions for a century, will not be abolished. The rules committee will be headed by Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri and it will report for abrogation of the two-thirds rule as well as elimination of the unit rule. The latter binds the state delegations to abide by the decision of a majority of the delegation. According to Mr. Farley, these changes will not prevent the practically unanimous nomination of President Roosevelt.

Present plans are to have Mr. Roosevelt go to Philadelphia on Saturday, June 27, to close the convention by accepting the nomination in a speech delivered either in the Municipal stadium or in the University of Pennsylvania stadium close to the convention hall.

Roosevelt Addresses National Democratic Club

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made what might be considered the first of his campaign speeches before the National Democratic club in New York city. Tammany was there in full force, but such disgruntled Democrats as Al Smith and John J. Raskob were conspicuous by their absence. Mr. Roosevelt declared his purpose to bring more food, higher prices and better homes for the people.

"If you increase buying power," he said, "prices will go up; more goods will be sold. Wages ought to and must go up with prices. This does not mean unsound inflation or skyrocketing prices; this should be avoided just as we seek to avoid bankruptcy sale values."

Turning to his critics with sarcasm, the President said "some individuals are never satisfied." Referring to charges of extravagance and mounting deficits, he said people complain to him about "the current costs of rebuilding America, about the burden on future America." He insisted that the measure should not be the three-billion-dollar deficit of this year but the assertion that the national income has risen thirty-five billions in 1932 to sixty-five billions in 1936.

New Tax Bill Battle Started in House

THE administration's bill to levy about 800 million dollars in new taxes yearly was introduced in the house by the ways and means committee, and a fierce battle started immediately. The Republican minority of the committee issued a report which stated that the proposed tax law was "unsound in principle, will undermine business stability, is another step toward regimentation of all business, and is not designed to raise revenue but admittedly is another New Deal experiment."

Conservative Democrats joined with the Republicans in this attack against the bill, but the administration leaders were confident the measure would pass before May 1.

Green Urges Unions to Remain Nonpartisan

WILLIAM GREEN, president of the American Federation of Labor, has sent a letter to all affiliated unions urging that they adhere to the federation's "traditional nonpartisan political policy." He says:

"For obvious reasons, labor should avoid division even in the pursuit of its political policies. Such division can be avoided if working men and women, loyal to the American Federation of Labor, will refrain from identifying themselves with any political movement designed to serve as a substitute for the nonpartisan political policy of the American Federation of Labor."

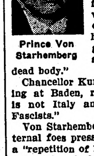
Some time ago George L. Berry asked all unions to join "Labor's Nonpartisan league," the object of which, he said, was "to put American Federation of Labor unions on the record for President Roosevelt."

Navy in Six-Week Drill on the Pacific

ONE hundred and fifty vessels of the United States fleet, with 450 airplanes, are now engaged in the year's grand maneuvers in the Pacific. War conditions prevail and the vessels and their crews are being given a severe test of their fitness that will last for six weeks. The Panama canal region was the first objective of the fleet. The units are divided into attacking and defending forces and something is doing all the time, day and night. The naval officers are trying to solve the seventeenth of a series of strategic problems, each based upon some possible international situation, mapped out by naval strategists.

Von Starhemberg of Austria Voices His Defiance

CIVIL war in Austria became a possibility as the quarrel between the Fascists led by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg and the clerical and monarchist elements became acute. Government officials, however, were trying desperately to patch up the trouble.



Prince Von Starhemberg

Prince Von Starhemberg, who is vice chancellor, in a defiant speech at Horn warned his political opponents that his heimwehr, or home guard, would be dissolved "only over my dead body."

Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, speaking at Baden, retorted that "Austria is not Italy and Austrians are not Fascists."

Von Starhemberg asserted that if internal foes press too hard there will be a "repetition of 1934"—when the heimwehr triumphed in a short but bloody civil war against Socialists. False friends surround Schuschnigg, von Starhemberg said, and the heimwehr plans to protect him from them.

For Austria, said Starhemberg, there are three possibilities—a continuation of the authority of the state, Nazilsm, or communism. He asserted the heimwehr is determined to preserve the Fascist system and would continue as a separate organization but that other private armies would be absorbed by the regular army.

Advance of the Italians in Ethiopia Continues

ITALY'S victorious troops in northern Ethiopia continued their advance on Addis Ababa, though it was somewhat retarded by the efforts of the natives to blow up the roadways and otherwise harass the invaders. The Italian motorized column in this movement is the most formidable yet formed in this war and is notable for the large number of white troops included.

General Graziana's southern army, meanwhile, was driving toward Harar, second city of the empire, in three columns. The Ethiopians were putting up stiff resistance at various points but everywhere were driven back, according to Italian dispatches.

Contreras Is Elected President of Venezuela

ELEAZAR LOPEZ CONTRERAS, an army officer who rose to the rank of general under the late dictator, Juan Vincente Gomez, is now president of Venezuela. The national congress elected him to that office by a vote of 132 to 1 and directed that he assume the office on May 29. As president of the chamber, Contreras became temporary president on the death of Gomez.

Supreme Court Decision in Stock Yards Case

UPHOLDING a reduction of rates and charges at the St. Joseph, Mo., stockyards, the Supreme court held that the findings made by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace justified the rates he set and that the stockyards operators had failed to show confiscation.

Justice Louis D. Brandeis, Harlan F. Stone and Benjamin Cordozo agreed that the rates should be upheld but in an opinion by Justice Brandeis expressed belief that the court went too far in passing on the fairness of rates.

Two Well-Known Writers Taken by Death

DEATH came to two of America's well-known writers. One was Finley Peter Dunne, creator of "Mr. Dooley," the genial satirist of modern life whose witty sayings delighted two generations. The second was Percy Hammond, veteran dramatic critic of the New York Herald Tribune, one of the foremost of the country's commentators on matters theatrical. Both passed away in New York city.

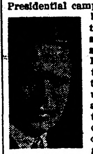
Secret Panama Treaty Is Cause of Concern

ARMY and navy officials were reported to be concerned over a new treaty with Panama which is being secretly considered by the government. It was said an uncorrected text of the pact showed it provides for "joint conversations" rather than for defense of the Canal Zone in event of aggression. The grant by Panama for the "use, occupation, and control of lands and waters outside the jurisdiction of the United States," if necessary, is renounced by this country in the treaty.

Chairman Pittman of the senate foreign relations committee said closed hearings on the treaty soon would be completed, after which the senate might consider the document in secret session in order to avoid international complications. Senator Hiram Johnson has said he will try to have the text of the pact made public before it is taken up by the senate.

Steiwer to Be Key-Noter for the Republicans

WHEN the Republicans gather in national convention at Cleveland next June their keynote for their Presidential campaign will be sounded by Frederick Steiwer, the eloquent and handsome United States senator from Oregon. He was selected to be temporary chairman of the convention by unanimous vote of the arrangements committee of the national committee after due consideration had been given the names of several other prominent Republicans.



Senator Steiwer

Observers held that the motive in picking Steiwer was a desire of the party leaders to give the convention a western atmosphere at the start, with an especial eye to agriculture. The senator has been actively identified with wheat growing and his home town, Portland, is a center of the northwestern battleground of the November elections.

Congressman Bertrand Snell of New York, minority leader in the house, was selected to be permanent chairman of the convention, a position he held in the convention of 1932.

Leftists Are Winners in French Elections

COMMUNISTS and various brands of Socialists appear to have won a considerable victory in the French elections for the chamber of deputies, though the large number of run-off elections necessary may tone down the results. The greatest gain is shown by the Communists, who are likely to have 50 seats; but this does not please the Radical Socialists for they cannot count on the Communists in forming a government and fear that without them the chamber will be ungovernable.

Senate Passes Emergency Flood Control Bill

DISREGARDING warnings by Senator Vandenberg of Michigan against too hasty action, the senate passed a bill introduced by Senator Overton of Louisiana authorizing the expenditure of $272,000,000 for flood control work on the lower Mississippi river and its tributaries. There was no record vote. The bill has no relation to the omnibus flood control measure now pending, which may reach a billion. The sum named in the senate bill is authorized merely to be appropriated and will have to be put in a deficiency appropriation bill. Senator Overton declared it was justified by emergency conditions.

In addition to the 272 million dollars there is authorized an appropriation of 15 millions to be allocated by the secretary of war and used in rescue work or repair and maintenance of flood control works.

Rescue of Entombed Men Is Epic of Heroism

THAT old gold mine at Moose River, Nova Scotia, provided an epic tale of unselfish and heroic human endeavor that will be told for many a year. For ten days more than a hundred experienced miners strove unceasingly to rescue three men who had been trapped by the fall of dirt and rocks in the 140-foot level of the abandoned mine they were inspecting. Machinery and other equipment were brought from far away. A diamond drill was driven through and through this small opening, communication was established and food was dropped down but already one of the three was dead of hunger and exhaustion. Finally the desperate efforts of the rescuers were successful and the two survivors were brought safely to the surface, together with the body of the dead man. Those saved were Dr. D. E. Robertson, famous and beloved surgeon of Toronto, and C. A. Scadding. The one who did not live was Herman Magill, also of Toronto.

Black Committee Scored by Publishers

WHAT American newspaper publishers think of the actions of the Black lobby committee was expressed forcibly and unequivocally in resolutions adopted by their national association at its annual meeting in New York. The committee was accused of having violated the first, fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution by its seizures of private communications, and the publishers recommended that all victims of the committee's acts seek civil damages and demand the "prosecution of all involved in the odious affair under the criminal statutes of the United States."

17-YEAR LOCUSTS DUE THIS SUMMER IN PARTS OF U. S.

The periodical cicada, or 17-year locust, will add its grindstone note to the insect chorus this summer. The Department of Agriculture at Washington announced that of 30 known cicada groups in the United States, brood X, last seen and heard in 1919, is scheduled to emerge late in May over its usual range. This is from New York state west to Missouri and from Michigan to northern Alabama and Georgia.

The periodical cicada (pronounced si-kay'-da) is a relative of the dog day cicada, whose "zing" is heard in the hottest of summer weather. But it is not a locust or grasshopper, and no relative of that well-known locust, the katydid.

The cicada belongs to the large family of bugs of the genus Hemiptera. This includes, in the division opposite the cicada, such pests as the squashbug, bedbug, and chinchbug. The cicada resembles a horse fly. It has a wide, blunt head, prominent eyes, a stout body, and two pairs of transparent wings.

It appears only every 13 or 17 years because the larvae require that time to reach maturity. The eggs are laid in twigs which the female cicada saws open. When the eggs hatch the larvae drop to the ground and bury themselves. They feed on juices sucked from tree roots until they emerge and complete the metamorphosis into adult cicadas.

The object of the cicada's shrill song is to mate. The females, which have no auditory organs, eat plants, while the males make all the noise. Their sound instruments, situated at each side of the abdomen, resemble drums. These are vibrated by powerful muscles. The tone can be modified by sounding boards. The cicadas drum in concert and can be heard for more than a quarter of a mile.

Turn Gadget and Motor Runs on Half Dozen Kinds of Fuel

An invention allowing a standard make motorcycle to use any of a half dozen mineral or vegetable fuels with only a slight hand adjustment was demonstrated by Stefan Witkowski, Polish engineer living in Geneva, Switzerland, before some fifty technicians and reporters and an Italian observer.

The omnivorous motorcycle consumed gasoline, gas oil, kerosene, fuel oil, and alcohol, doing about fifty miles per hour. The inventor says the motor will run just as well on soybean oil and even operate on olive oil, though its low calorie value makes the latter uneconomic.

Witkowski also has installed his invention on the motor of a French standard automobile which has run, he says, more than 60,000 miles. The invention suppresses the carburetor, substituting for it what is termed an "injector," working with a pump.

Trick

By WILLIAM J. BRENNAN

SADIE BURNS managed to laugh gayly enough until she hung up the receiver—then lost herself in sudden and absorbing thought. So Duncan Beach was bringing Ann Dunn to Alice's party tomorrow night! Alice had dropped that bit of information as routine detail, concealing a threat or, perhaps, even a mild taunt. She remembered that Alice's attempt to attract Duncan Beach had not met with outstanding success.

But Ann Dunn—well, that was something else again. She was almost sure to be ambitious and clever enough to appeal to Duncan's vanity, something which Sadie herself had never even tried. Besides, Ann Dunn seemed possessed of an instinctive, devastating flair for clothes. There was no doubt about it, Ann Dunn could take Duncan Beach in her stride if she really set her mind to it.

But why should Sadie care what became of Duncan Beach and Ann Dunn? Hadn't she had her chance to marry Duncan if she had cared? That was just the trouble, she admitted to herself desperately. She did care, much more than she would ever want anyone to know.

A smile flitted across her face, her eyes lighted with sudden hope. Of course it was an old trick and a simple one. Just old and simple enough so that it might work. She picked up the phone and called Bob Eldred's number.

Kind and unselfish Bob who had been her stand-by for what seemed ages, and who joked about his father promising him a partnership in the clothing store when and if he should get married.

"Hello, Bob. This is simple Sadie. How do I look?"

"Worried," Bob answered. She could imagine him smiling.

"Don't you ever get tired of mind reading? But I really am in a jam and it's either you help me out or it's the white flag for me."

"Ann Dunn?"

"Why Bob, how did you find out? Are people talking?"

"—and acting, lady. She's leading you by two lengths and hugging the rail. Get it?"

"Precisely. And that's just where you enter the scene," she told him. "There's a party tomorrow night at Alice's. Call for me at eight," she commanded.

There was a moment's pause. Sadie knew that Duncan and Bob were not the best of friends, to put it mildly. And just in that moment it occurred to her that she would lose Bob's friendship if she married Duncan Beach.

"This is positively the last time, kid. I'll be there at eight and you have your duds on," he ordered in a tone that she had never heard him use before.

Sadie surveyed herself in the oval mirror on the other side of the sitting room. Her shimmering, ice blue satin clung tenaciously to her figure in approved fashion. She had selected this dress because Duncan had always admired it, and regretted that her face had not the classical beauty displayed by others, particularly by Ann Dunn. The best she could say of it was that it was a healthy face and reflected her gayety.

Her wrist watch showed that it was five past eight. Bob was usually on time. Then she heard his step outside and ran to the door. Bob scooped her up and kissed her with neatness and force before she could object. "Why, Bob! What on earth are you trying to do?" she asked, momentarily stunned.

"If I'm to arouse the spirit of green-eyed jealousy in Duncan Beach I have to rehearse for it, don't I? And that's the game, isn't it? He looked down on her with amusement.

"Why, yes," she faltered, "but not here." Then she laughed. "But you did well."

"I've never had any complaints," he bragged.

Duncan Beach did not let down his resistance until his fourth dance with Sadie. "When can I call, Sadie?" His eyes were pleading with her for forgiveness.

She smiled up at him. "How about Sunday night, if you're not too busy?"

"I'll be there," he whispered.

Then she was riding over country hills with Bob in the moonlight, happy over her success, which somehow didn't seem so important now.

"What was the yank for leaving the party?" Bob asked.

"There's always a right moment for everything, Bob, and I picked it for leaving." Then she heard herself adding with some surprise, "Not that it was so important, now that I have what I wanted."

Bob stopped the car suddenly and took her in his arms. Before she could protest his lips touched hers tenderly, softly. Then desperately and breathtakingly in a kiss that shook them both.

"Bob, have you gone plain crazy tonight?"

"Not if taking what I want can be called crazy." He faced her in the moonlight. "I'm tired of carting you around for somebody else's convenience. And, as you say, there's always a right moment for everything."

His face came closer to hers and somehow she found herself waiting anxiously, expectantly. She had heard that real love is where you find it, but never until now did she believe it. She could feel his breath warm on her cheeks. "And sometimes those moments come two or three at a time, Bob," she murmured through parted lips.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

HAPPY DAYS IN THE GREEN FOREST

THESE were happy days in the Forest. At least they were happy for Lightfoot the Deer. They were the happiest days he had ever known. You see, he had won beautiful, slender, young Miss Daintyfoot, and now she was no longer Miss Daintyfoot but Mrs. Lightfoot. Lightfoot was sure that there was no one anywhere so beautiful as she, and Mrs. Lightfoot knew that there was no one so handsome and brave as he.

Wherever Lightfoot went Mrs. Lightfoot went. He showed her all his favorite hiding places. He led her to his favorite eating places. She did not tell him she was already acquainted with every one of them, that she knew the Green Forest quite as well as he did. If he had stopped to think how day after day she had managed to keep out of his sight while he hunted for her, he would have known that there was little he could show her which she did not already know. But he didn't stop to think, and proudly led her from place to place. And Mrs. Lightfoot wisely expressed delight with all she saw quite as if it were all new.

Of Course All the Little People of the Green Forest Hurried to Pay Their Respects to Mrs. Lightfoot.

Of course, all the little people of the Green Forest hurried to pay their respects to Mrs. Lightfoot and to tell Lightfoot how glad they felt for him. And they really did feel glad. You see, they all loved Lightfoot and they knew that now he would be happier than ever and that there would be no danger of his leaving the Green Forest because of loneliness. The Green Forest would not be the same at all without Lightfoot the Deer.

Lightfoot told Mrs. Lightfoot all about the terrible days of the hunting season and how glad he was that she had not been in the Green Forest then. He told her how the hunters with terrible guns had given him no rest and how he had to swim the Big River to get away from the hounds.

"I know," replied Mrs. Lightfoot softly. "I know all about it. You see, there were hunters on the Great Mountain. In fact, that is how I happened to come down to the Green Forest. They hunted me so up there that I did not dare stay, and I came down here thinking that there might be fewer hunters here. I would not have believed that I could ever be thankful to hunters for anything, but I am; truly I am."

There was a puzzled look on Lightfoot's face. "What for?" he demanded. "I can't imagine anybody being thankful to hunters for anything."

"Oh, you stupid!" cried Mrs. Lightfoot. "Don't you see that if I hadn't been driven down from the Great Mountain I never would have found you?"

"You mean I never would have found you," retorted Lightfoot. "I guess I owe those hunters more than you do. I owe them the greatest happiness I have ever known, but I never would have thought of it myself. Isn't it queer how things which seem the very worst possible sometimes turn out to be the very best possible?"

TRY THIS TRICK

BALANCING AN EGG

THIS is an excellent dinner table trick. The magician accomplishes the seemingly difficult task of balancing an egg upon end. When guests try the trick they find that they lack the ability to do it.

The trick is not so difficult as it appears; and there is a reason. It must be performed on a white tablecloth, where the magician secretly has placed a pinch of salt to form a little heap.

These grains do not show. It is upon them that the magician sets the egg. The salt forms sufficient base to support the egg upright. In concluding the trick the magician passes the egg for examination. He brushes away the salt while people are inspecting the egg.

THE GATES

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE WALK the streets of some strange town,
But we meet Smith, and we pass
Brown,
See houses where we do not dwell,
Yet, seeing, see our own as well;
We walk strange cities up and down,
Strange streets with nothing new to tell.

They are as we are, we as they,
The men we meet along the way:
Some care of ours that grieves the mind
Is not some grief of some strange kind;
If we could see, if they would say,
The selfsame sorrows we would find.

Yes, if one really understands,
Why talk of towns, or states, or lands
Why talk of lands or town or states,
While every door some step awaits?
God made all hills, all vales, all strands,
But man, not God, put up the gates.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

A DAY WITH SAUCES

SAUCE making is an art, for many dishes are made by the addition of a well-seasoned and appropriate sauce. The use of flour for thickening sauces is liked by the majority of cooks, though cornstarch makes a more delicate and smooth sauce. Its only drawback is it needs good cooking to remove the raw taste of the starch. When using cornstarch for thickening mix it with a little cold water, milk or fruit juice and add to the hot liquid, then it will cook smooth. Use half as much cornstarch as flour, if the recipe calls for flour. For pudding and other dessert sauces, one may follow the recipe and have good results, provided that the base of the sauce is properly made.

A delicious sauce which may be used with duck, goose, turkey, game or chicken is:

Brown Orange Sauce.

Take two cupfuls of meat stock or two cans of bouillon, or two teaspoonfuls of vegetable extract of bouillon, or three bouillon cubes in two cupfuls of water. Season the stock with one-half teaspoonful each of white pepper and paprika, a dash of cayenne, one cupful of orange juice, two oranges, pulp and slice of rind. Cook five minutes. Take from the fire and stand a few minutes. Brown two tablespoonfuls of flour, add the butter and brown, then blend well until smooth. Add to the stock slowly, stirring all the time. Return to a double boiler and cook, beating occasionally with an egg beater. Add one-half cupful of white grapes skinned and seeded.

With these two sauces, white and brown, one may make thousands of sauces suitable to serve on salads, desserts, fritters, and dishes without number.

A most delightful sauce to serve on buttered toast in place of the usual cream or milk toast is:

Celery Sauce.

Cut the celery into small pieces and cook in boiling water, using as little as possible. Drain, reserving the water. Now prepare the ordinary white sauce using one and one-half tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter, add the reserved liquid and enough rich milk to make a cupful, cook until smooth, adding salt to season. Add the cooked celery, a dash of paprika and let stand over hot water to keep hot after cooking well. Just before serving add one egg yolk beaten with half a cupful of thick cream, stir and cook long enough to cook the egg.

Mauritius, a British island to the east of Madagascar, was the home of the now extinct dodo, a large pigeon with rudimentary wings. Its passing led to the popular saying: "As dead as the dodo." MATCHMAKER

By MEREDITH SCHOLL

© Associated Newspapers. WNU Service.

"I DON'T like to be catty," Lillie Newhall said, "but you're wasting your time with Glen Fales."

Lillie surveyed her perfectly proportioned features in the dressing table mirror, and deftly tucked an unruly strand of hair back into place.

"Glen," she went on, "was the most popular man at Ryson Beach last summer. Even gorgeous Shirley Leighton made a play for him."

Naomi, standing in the doorway of the room which she shared with Lillie Newhall during the Thornton's week-end party, turned and went out without waiting to hear what else the girl might have to say.

Walking down the deep-cushioned stairs, she sighed heavily.

She understood what Lillie had meant.

Lillie was warning her, ordering her to keep out of the way, because she didn't stand a chance with Glen anyhow.

Which was right.

She wasn't fool enough to let herself think she stood a chance with him—not with such a beautiful creature as Lillie to compete with.

Naomi knew she was ordinary in looks and ordinary in her ways with men.

And because of this she wondered why Grace Thornton had invited her down for the week-end.

Suddenly she remembered that it hadn't been Grace, but Lillie who had engineered the invitation.

Lillie? Why should Lillie—?

Naomi stopped in her descent of the stairs.

It came to her in a rushing flood of horror.

Lillie had wanted her there for the sake of comparison!

She knew that her own attractiveness would be far more pronounced if someone like Naomi were on hand.

The realization was sickening.

Even that warning had been part of Lillie's scheme.

For Lillie knew that if she warned Naomi to keep off, the latter would instinctively resent her attitude and attempt to win Glen Fales' interest, which was exactly what Lillie wanted.

She Turned, but He Seized Her Wrist. "You're a Fool!"

Out on the terrace, Grace Thornton rushed up to her with extended hands.

"Darling! So glad you could come."

"Hello, Grace. I'm glad to be here."

A man and a woman were standing near, and Grace led Naomi up to them.

"Glen, this is Naomi Peterson. You remember her? She was at Ryson last summer."

"Of course," Glen Fales, tall, handsome, tanned, smiled down at Naomi and took her hand. "Of course I remember. Let me see, there were two of you. I mean—you had a friend—"

"Yes. Lillie Newhall. She'll be down in a moment."

Naomi tried hard to keep the bitterness out of her voice.

She wanted to add: "You'll always find me where Lillie happens to be. She drags me around so that men will notice how beautiful she is."

Grace Thornton fluttered away to greet other guests, and Naomi found herself alone with Glen Fales.

"It's good seeing you again," he was saying, but his eyes were looking over her head.

"She'll be here presently," Naomi said briefly.

Glen regarded her in surprise.

"Who?" he asked.

"Lillie. She was about ready when I left."

"Oh. I see."

He seemed on the point of saying more, but at the moment Lillie appeared, and Grace brought her across the terrace.

In the excitement of the reunion that followed, Naomi moved away.

She felt a little sick; not equal to the task of watching Lillie employing her man-catching artifice.

An hour later, sitting near the fish pond, she saw Glen Fales coming across the lawn.

She thought: "Lillie has escaped him. That's part of her game—never appear too eager . . . He wants to talk to me about her. Men are funny that way."

Glen Fales sat down beside her, uninvited.

"Been looking for you everywhere," he smiled.

"You know, I remember last summer—"

"Lillie said you would," Naomi interrupted.

"I mean she remembered, too, and was looking forward to this week-end."

"Was she?" Glen arched his brows in that curious way he had.

"Actually. But please don't tell her I said so. She'd die of mortification."

"Then why do you tell me?"

Naomi stood up.

"Because it's what you wanted to know."

She set off along the path that led back to the house.

"I don't blame you for your interest. Lillie's beautiful, and—and I'm sure you'll have no regrets."

He caught up with her before she'd taken ten steps.

"Listen, why the intense interest in me and your friend. I mean are you a matchmaker or something?"

She turned on him, eyes alight.

"Matchmaker! Isn't that the role I'm supposed to play?"

She laughed.

"Lillie depends on me. I can't fail her in her hour of need."

Throughout the evening Naomi succeeded in avoiding Glen Fales.

She saw him watching her, felt his eyes following her about the dance floor.

And suddenly she hated him.

Hated him because he was making her unhappy and miserable, because she knew he wanted to talk to her about Lillie.

That would be torture.

It wasn't as it should be, not when the feeling in her heart was of its present nature.

She saw him dancing with Lillie, saw them stroll on to the terrace together, and, at length, unable to stand it longer, she left the ballroom and headed for the stairs.

At the foot of the stairs she paused.

Glen Fales had appeared from nowhere and had called to her.

There was a curious expression in his eyes.

"Aren't you being just a little ridiculous?"

"Whatever do you mean?"

"I mean all this talk about your friend Lillie—and me."

Naomi laughed.

The laugh bordered on hysteria.

"Mr. Fales, I don't know what you're talking about. I—I've done what was—expected of me—as best I could—and now—I—I'm through. I can't go on."

She turned, but he seized her wrist.

"Wait a minute."

He drew her close to him.

"You're a fool! A little fool!"

Tears were in her eyes.

"Yes—I am! I know I am! Let me go!"

"No. I've been trying to talk to you all evening. The best I could do was talk to your friend Lillie—about you. She is vastly annoyed and disgusted. She finally went off with Ray Philbrick and left me alone."

Naomi swayed a little, and he caught her in his arms.

"You're—lying. It isn't the truth. You're trying to make it easy. You know I love you—and you're trying not to hurt me. It's Lillie you want. She's beautiful and—"

He crushed out her words with his lips.

He held her close for long minutes . . . released her at last . . . looked into her eyes.

"Now do you believe it's you I love? And no one else?"

Naomi closed her eyes.

After a moment she opened them.

He was still there, still with the same intent, honest look in his eyes. . . . For answer she pulled his face down to her lips once more. . . .

"I Spy" Mirrors Survive in North French Homes

Although northern France is one of the most up-to-date and prosperous regions in the nation, one picturesque aspect of the Middle ages still persists—the "I Spy" mirrors which permit the householders to spy upon persons passing in the street, observes a (Lille) France United Press correspondent.

In French these mirrors are called espionos which, translated literally, means "spies" and the dictionary gives this definition: "A looking glass so placed near a window to show persons coming or going outside." In principle, this mirror is the same as the one placed before a chauffeur in an automobile so that he can see what is behind him.

Such mirrors have existed in French Flanders for centuries, but they are to be found nowhere else in France. Almost every house is equipped with one or two of these mirrors right next to the principal window of the ground floor. Those on the inside thereby are permitted to see everything that goes on outside, without being seen by those whom they are inspecting.

These mirrors also are used in keeping out undesirable persons. When the bell rings, the maid looks into the mirror and reports to her mistress. If the visitor is persona non grata, the mistress remarks: "Let her ring, don't open the door, I don't want to see her today."

Even the more recently built dwelling houses are equipped with these mirrors.

Valuable Fishing Rights

In 1924 in Peiping, China, a man bought the "fishing rights" in the pond of the old Winter Palace for three years for $450,000—and made a fortune without selling a fish. All he did was to dredge for the countless gold identification tags that had been attached to the numerous fish given daily as gifts to the emperors for more than 300 years.—Eliot White, Roselle, N. J., in Collier's Weekly.

"Love Alliances"

During [illegible] of Chivalry in Europe, when [illegible]ands and wives were not supposed to be in love with each other, many knights and ladies who were married to others entered into platonic partnerships called "love alliances." Strangely enough, says Collier's Weekly, these alliances were frequently solemnized by a religious ceremony and were harder to dissolve than regular marriages.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there.

"Twin Bays Golf Club," replied the gentleman. "Its only about three miles up this road."

"Well," the Duke suggested, "if you're in a hurry, why don't you let me take you there? Then Evans and I can come back, and have another try at this. If Evans can't do anything, I'll send a mechanic from the village."

"That's very kind of you, but I've a better idea. You say you're hungry, too. Why don't you lunch with us, and leave your man to do the rest?"

"Swell!" said the Duke. "Evans, drive us to the Twin Bays Golf Club, and then come back to this job."

"You know what to do, Bates," he continued to his man. "Come on; let's get in!"

Barry turned round to look for the girl in the green dress. She was whispering to Evans, the other side of the stalled car.

As they strolled up the road:

"You're Mr. Ridder, aren't you?" the girl asked.

And before Barry could reply, she went on: "Your man told me. I thought I recognized the car."

"John Ridder's son!" exclaimed the white-haired gentleman. "Well, I am surprised! So you've made it up with your father, have you? You must have heard him speak of me. I'm Judge Hambidge."

For a moment, Barry considered disclaiming his bogus identity. But what was the use? He could see Evans' listening ears through the half-open window between them and the driver's seat, and he wanted to get to Montauk Point.

"Not Judge Curtis Hambidge?" he said, omitting to add that he had seen the name in yesterday's newspaper.

"The same," replied the Judge. "Your father and I are—well, we've known each other since he came down to Southampton, three years ago. This is my daughter, Patricia. Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

He laughed.

Patricia looked straight ahead.

"Where is your father?"

"On his way to Bad Nauheim."

"That heart of his, eh? Always told him it would cut up again some day." He leaned forward, and wound up the window behind Evans' ears. "Well, I'm glad you two got together at last. It's been killing your mother. She spoke to me about it—privately. Pat and I are the only people in Southampton who know that John Ridder's got a son. He wouldn't mention it, and wouldn't let anyone else mention it. I tried. 'I couldn't act that way to a boy of mine,' I said; 'no matter what he did. Flat on his uppers, somewhere in Florida, and you in a big empty house on Long Island.' . . . I suppose you're going to spend the season here, now."

"I don't know—yet," answered the Duke.

"Well, I would. This is your chance. Make good, and the old man'll be ashamed of himself when he comes back. Haven't got a job, anywhere, have you?"

"I'll bet he dances wonderfully," said the girl.

She had been taking him in, out of the corner of her eye, and now she paid him this compliment with a quiet scorn that was as subtle as her perfume.

"I had a job a few months ago," observed the Duke.

"What happened?"—with a disarming smile. "Did they want you to work?"

"You're being very rude, my dear," the Judge admonished. "The truth is that Patricia's rather fed-up on our young men. And she's heard a few pretty wild stories about you."

They had reached the club now.

"Get Judge Hambidge's car running," the Duke instructed Evans, "and then you and Bates get something to eat, and bring both cars back here."

"Not later than two o'clock," said the Judge.

A moment afterward, he was writing "John Clarke Ridder, Jr., in the guest-book.

"You've got me all wrong," Barry told the girl in the green dress. "I'm not exactly a rich man's son."

"No?" said the girl. "That's nice!"

She was rude. And extremely beautiful. "Hard-boiled," thought the Duke. "There's one lady I'd like to tame."

Together, they strolled through the wide Colonial foyer of the club, and into its white and deserted dining room.

"Early yet," commented the Judge. "Southampton doesn't get going before the end of June. Pleasant club, though. We're opening our house next week. Just ran down today to have the water turned on, and all that sort of thing. How's your place? Still got Willetts?"

"Yes."

"Good servant, Willetts. Your father lays him off all winter, and goes to live in a hotel, but Willetts comes back every spring. How about a little salmon salad, Mr. Ridder?"

"Salmon salad — with mayonnaise, please."

He smiled, remembering yesterday's hot-dog at Huntington.

"Rather a coincidence, meeting you here," he said. "I'd just seen your name in The Globe."

The Judge's brow clouded.

"Yes. Your father's newspaper. They say I'm a Tammany Judge, robbing the peepul."

"It's always easy to work up excitement about the under-dog," Patricia cut in. "As though it really mattered what happened to the under-dog."

"You don't like rich men's sons," the Duke remarked, "and you don't like under-dogs. Just whom do you like, Miss Hambidge?"

"People who make their way."

"Can't you feel sorry for people who don't?"

"Not very," she admitted, frankly. "Nobody does. Most of us pretend to. I don't know why. They're merely the brake on civilization. They don't count. Civilization does."

The hard-boiled minx!

"I suppose you'll be keeping bachelor's hall most of the summer," suggested the Judge. "The Nauheim treatment is eight weeks, I believe. Well, you'll have to make yourself at home with us. I'm a widower, and away a good part of the time, so you and Patricia can fight things out on the tennis court." He glanced at his watch. "We'll be down for good the first of next week. How about dining with us Thursday?"

"Please do," smiled the girl.

"I should be delighted," said the Duke.

"At eight? Don't dress. We wear flannels most of the time out here."

"Flannels it is," said the Duke.

Purring softly, as though nothing had ever been wrong with its vitals, the Judge's car drew up to the steps.

"Until Thursday, then, and thank you for the lift. I'm mighty glad to have met John Ridder's boy."

"I'm glad, too," added Patricia, giving him her hand. "Maybe I'll learn to like rich men's sons."

"Or under-dogs."

"That sounds a little more improbable," said the girl.

They drove away.

Evans' humor seemed to have improved with luncheon.

"Montauk Point?" he asked, holding open the car door.

"No," the Duke answered. "I've changed my mind about Montauk Point. Some other day. I think we'll go home now."

CHAPTER II

Well, of all the mad resolutions!

"I'm going to wind up in prison," reflected the Duke. "And, as a good many wiser men have done, on account of a girl."

"A snip of a girl, at that!"

He grinned at that.

Where was he going to get flannels? Or even a clean shirt? How could he hope to get away with this for a whole week? "Let's think it out quietly. Papa and Mama are safe in Bad Nauheim. Probably for a couple of months. The real John Ridder isn't coming to Southampton."

"Stop at the railway station," he instructed the chauffeur. "I've got to see about my bag."

But, oddly enough, the bag hadn't arrived.

"A big tan-leather suit case?" echoed the baggage-master. You're going to have a hard time locating it, unless you can find your check."

"Must have dropped it from my pocket when I pulled out my railway ticket on the train," His Grace told Willetts at dinner. Willetts had been very apologetic about sending the master away for lunch. "It's cook, sir. She's new, and, what with the kitchen all upside down—"

"Don't worry," interrupted the Duke. "I had a capital time. But what are we going to do about clothes, Willetts?"

"Well," the butler responded, "there's your father's tailor, sir. Crowell, on Fifty-first street, just east of the Avenue. You could start an account there, sir. And Mr. Ridder Senior gets his haberdashery at Bartlett's, and his shoes at Kennedy's."

"All that takes time," Barry objected, "and I'm going out to dinner next Thursday. And Thursday's five days off. I haven't a shirt to my back, Willetts, or anything else but my father's purple pyjamas."

Willetts' face brightened.

"If you can wear those, sir, I don't see why you can't wear Mr. Ridder's linen—in an emergency, sir. There's a whole high-boy full of it in your closet, sir. And he's got a dozen summer suits in that cedar chest."

"Flannels, too?"

"Oh, plenty of flannels," answered Willetts. "And golf trousers. They're sure to fit."

Both men smiled.

Wonderful what a smile would do. His own broad grin undoubtedly explained the friendliness of the butler, and he himself had fallen victim to the same upturning of a pair of carmined lips. He had resented Patricia Hambidge whole-heartedly until she smiled. He still resented her, but he knew exactly how many days it was to Thursday.

The case against Evans was that he never smiled.

"What's the matter with Evans?" asked the Duke, using his fork on a morsel of sweetbread sous cloche.

"Matter, sir?"

"He seems morose," said the Duke.

"The fact is, Evans' wife is very ill, sir."

"In Patchogue?"

"Yes, sir. We left her there. That's what made us late last night."

"Go on."

"That's about all, sir. Mrs. Evans has been ill some time. It's a kind of anemia, sir. Evans didn't want to leave her. When he found he was coming out here—only yesterday, sir—he asked Mr. Ridder if he could bring Mrs. Evans. There's quite a big room over the garage. And Mr. Ridder said, 'No.' He's—well, he's firm, Mr. Ridder is. I guess you know that, sir. And then Evans decided to put her up in the village for a few days. But she was taken bad at Patchogue, sir, and we had to leave her at a hotel. Evans was a good deal upset. They've only been married a few months."

"I see," said the Duke.

He thought about the matter all through dinner.

As he was quitting the table, "Willetts," he said, "I think you'd better tell Evans to go back to Patchogue, and get his wife. Tonight, if she's fit to travel. Or tomorrow morning. My father won't know anything about it, and it seems a pity to waste that room over the garage."

"Yes, sir," said Willetts. "Thank you, sir. Anything else I can do for you, sir?"

He went on thinking about it before the fire.

"Houses without people, and people without houses."

Funny world!

"If I belonged here—" the Duke repeated to himself.

"The trouble with people like my father," he ruminated, "and Pat, is that they don't know what it is not to have enough. They've never known, or they've forgotten. We must've experienced things to have any feeling about them. If you see a man shot, you're horrified. But if you read about fifty thousand men killed in battle, it doesn't mean much to you.

"My father—"

And, suddenly, he realized that, when he said "My father," he was thinking of John Clarke Ridder.

For the twentieth time since the beginning of this astonishing adventure, his mouth spread itself into that broad grin.

"If I stayed here a month," he reflected, "I'd be calling the old man 'Dad.' Already, I'm calling the girl 'Pat.' Making myself at home—that's what I am. Better clear out after dinner next Thursday. Or after breakfast Friday. I'm simply ruining my appetite for baked beans!"

Willetts interrupted his meditations.

"Evans would like to know if you'd see him, sir."

"Of course. Tell him to come up."

He had an embarrassing ten minutes with the chauffeur—embarrassing, but very heart-warming. The surly Evans was transformed. Barry never had seen anyone else so grateful. "You must have thought I was pretty grouchy this mor[illegible] sir, but I was worried sick. I kept thinking how the missis looked when I left her last night. I didn't dare quit, on her account. If it'd been just me, I'd've starved to be with her."

"There's likely to be an awful row when my father gets home," warned the Duke.

"We can clear out before then." Evans hesitated. "The missis ought to be all right in a few weeks. It's wonderful, this sea air."

"When do you want to go for her?"

"I telephoned from the village, and the doctor thinks she'd be all right to make the trip in the morning, sir."

"Tell you what we'll do," said the Duke. "I've got to go to town to get some clothes and things. I'll ride with you to Patchogue, and take the train there. You can bring Mrs. Evans home, and I'll take another train out from New York."

Evans tried to speak, but without success.

"That's all now. You can figure what train I get from Patchogue, and tell Willetts. Good night."

At the door, Evans turned.

"I'll get square with you for this some day," he said, and gulped hard, and left the room.

"Gosh," mused the Duke; "I'd stay a month, if I thought I could do a few more things like that."

Mr. Crowell was most obliging, though a bit suspicious at first. John Clarke Ridder Senior's blue summer suit clung to his bogus son almost comically, and John Clarke Ridder Senior's shirt was choking him. "You made these togs for my father," the Duke remarked, "and I put 'em on this morning because I've just come up from Florida, and lost my baggage en route. I've got to have a suit by next Thursday. Can it be done?"

"I'm afraid not."

"Can you make a pair of flannel trousers by then?"

"I think so."

"Go to it," said the Duke.

Styles in Hair Tints.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—There's more news concerning the mummified remains of that lovely Egyptian princess they found the other day—that daughter of some early Pharaoh, she who died nearly 5,000 years ago and yet was still so beautifully preserved. Too bad that old recipe of the Pharaoh family was lost. They did make such good preserves.

The latest word is that the little lady's hair was dyed a henna color. Either that's news or something has stimulated a sudden change in Hollywood fashions. Just a little while ago, about every other potential movie queen you saw was going in for the platinum effect; and only too frequently, alas, the effect was that of a new tin roof on a vacant attic.

Now, by the great gross, the stylish ones are going red, reddish or redder. Today, within half a mile, I counted ten redheads, and not a white horse in sight, to prove the ancient saying.

Waning Presidential Booms.

WHAT with cyclones and floods down south, the daily press somehow failed to record among our spring casualties the untimely end of the Governor Talmadge boom. Poor little thing, it passed away at its home in Atlanta, Ga., just as it was learning, in prattling accents, to lisp "pa-pa."

Still the shock did not catch some of us unawares. We had a feeling it wasn't going to live. The second summer is so frequently fatal to those incubator babies.

For instance, you take the Ham Fish boom. Or of you didn't take it, somebody certainly did, because it hasn't been seen, or even heard of for months and months.

* * *

Gridiron Club Dinners.

EXCEPT the obituary column, nothing could be sadder than the newspaper account of a gridiron club dinner. Yet gridion club dinners aim to be satirically amusing and frequently are.

Turning them out must be a tremendously hard job, because they deal with the national political scene, and any producer of farces will tell you you can't burlesque a burlesque. In other words, you can't be very funny on a subject which already is so much funnier than anything you can think of—and that's what the fellows at Washington are up against.

This business of trying to be comic is a serious business anyway, especially since all comedy is predicated on distress. A fat man falling down makes us laugh because he suffers both in spirit and flesh. But if he is a pallbearer, say, at a funeral and falls down on his own high hat and maybe breaks up the services—well, now then, you've got something that's really funny.

A definition of comedy could be: Tragedy standing on its head with its pants torn.

* * *

Self-Chosen Landon Aids.

GOVERNOR LANDON must feel awfully fractional, not to say badly scattered, what with being levied on by so many comparative strangers all at once. Every day or two, with an altruism rare in this selfish age, some gallant volunteer elects himself by acclamation as the governor's eastern manager or his western manager, or his northwestern-by-southwestern manager or something. It makes no difference that he may never have heard of these parties before; up to six months ago, they'd never heard of him either.

He's like a previously neglected orphan child who suddenly comes into prospects and finds everybody in town trying to adopt him. Maybe a better simile would be that of a lone Thanksgiving turkey at a tableful of hungry boarders, with this one snatching the drumstick and that one grabbing the second joint—and Mr. W. R. Hearst clinging, with a grip of iron, to the wishbone.

* * *

Folly of Parole System.

THE perpetrators of the kidnaping case of a few months ago up in the state of Washington were both chronic offenders who, despite their records, had been paroled.

The fiend who recently committed the most hideous child murder that California has known in years was a convict out on parole. The degenerate who has just confessed to murdering that poor defenseless gentlewoman in New York the other day was—yes, you've guessed it—he was a convict on parole.

And all over the Union the work of turning loose criminals who have not completed their terms of punishment, indeed, in some cases hardly have begun them, goes merrily on.

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"The Turn of a Wheel"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter.

WHATEVER you might say about gambling, it takes nerve to do it. The best of the professional card sharks are men who can keep a poker face and never bat an eye when they're betting their last nickel. Yes, it takes plenty of nerve to gamble with your money—but it takes a doggone sight more courage to gamble with your life.

I've got a yarn here from Adventurer William Joseph Brinkley, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and unless I'm no good at all at reading between the lines of a story, Bill Brinkley is one of those lads who can keep a cool head and figure out the odds even at moments when his life is in the greatest of peril.

If Bill hadn't had that faculty he wouldn't be here collecting his ten and joining the Adventurers' club today. For back in 1915 fate tested out those iron nerves of his—and it was one of the most rigorous tests fate ever dished out to a guy, at that.

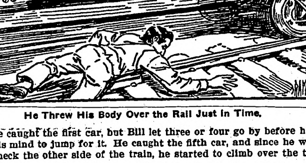
Iron nerve or no iron nerve, Bill admits he was pretty scared when it happened. Maybe "pretty scared" isn't quite the expression for it either. When it was all over Bill's nerves felt more like putty than iron.

Bill Had a Prosaic Job Checking Freight Cars.

It was down in the town of Atlanta, Ga., where he was working as an interchange clerk for the Central of Georgia railroad. Bill was just a young lad then, and his job consisted of checking up on cars that were to be switched from one line to another. It was during the June peach season and there was a lot of traffic on the line. The railroad yard was full of box cars and it kept both Bill and his partner, Willie Baker, on the jump most of the time.

The first job in Bill's routine was to get the seal numbers on the cars as soon as a train entered the yard. Bill would get them on one side while his partner, Willie, got them on the other. They were supposed to wait for those trains at the break-up track, but sometimes they would walk out to meet them and ride in on the first car. That's what they were doing when Old Lady Adventure swooped down and got Bill in her clutches.

They had walked out to meet the "Special" and the Special was late that night, so, without realizing it, they walked a little farther than they had intended. They met it quite a ways out of the yard when it was going at a pretty fast clip. Willie caught the first car, but Bill let three or four go by before he could make up his mind to jump for it. He caught the fifth car, and since he was supposed to check the other side of the train, he started to climb over the top.



He Threw His Body Over the Rail Just In Time.

But Falling Under a Train Isn't So Prosaic!

But Old Lady Adventure didn't ever intend that Bill should get to the other side of that train. As he reached for the top grab-iron with his right hand the one he was holding with his left broke away from the side of the car. His body swung out from the side of the car and started to fall.

As Bill fell he clutched at the top grab iron. He caught it, but his weight broke the hold. His body twisted—swung around between the cars. Then, as he dropped, his left leg hit the draw head. He swung head downward and fell—under the train.

"I lay flat on my back," says Bill, "and watched the bottoms of the cars whiz by only a few inches from my face. The wheels ground past only a few inches from my body on either side. I lay for a moment utterly unable to move. Then my mind began to race.

Underslung Hopper-Bottom Cars Meant Certain Death.

"In a flash I had figured everything out. I had been lucky enough to land between the tracks—not on them. As long as I did not move I was perfectly safe unless—and there was the horrible possibility—unless there was a hopper-bottomed coal car in that train. The hoppers of those cars are only a few inches from the ties. If one of them hit me I would be mangled—mashed to a pulp—spread along a half mile of track."

And there was a darned good possibility that not one but several of these hopper-bottomed cars were in the train. In long trains like the one Bill was under it was the custom to put short, empty coal cars between the refrigerator cars to cut down the side sway. Bill knew that. His mind was clicking on all four in his moment of peril—taking in every consideration.

There was just one way out—a perilous way—but something told Bill it was a better risk than waiting for one of those murderous hopper bottoms. He began watching the wheels as they clicked by—gauging their speed and their distance.

Courage Plus Quick Thinking Saved Bill's Life.

Where two cars were coupled together the wheels were only about four feet apart, but between two wheels on the same car there was a space of forty feet. If he could throw his body over the rail as the front wheel passed, and get across before the rear wheel hit him—he'd be safe.

There was no time to lose, but Bill gauged those moving wheels carefully. He nerved himself and tensed every muscle. Then, as a front wheel flashed by, he started to roll.

He hit the rail and started to go over. Would he get across in time? Bill didn't know because his eyes were shut. He didn't dare look at the thing he was doing. Then, all at once, he felt himself go over the top of the rail. He opened his eyes and saw clear sky overhead. He had made it!

"Then," says Bill, "came the reaction. I began trembling all over and got sick as a dog. And to this day the mere sight of a hopper-bottom coal car can give me a bad case of chills."

Primary Cause of Decay of Teeth Still Unknown

Teeth may decay in spite of a completely adequate diet, it is shown by experiments at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia university. Tests lasting three years contradict the theory, widely held in both scientific and lay circles, that tooth decay is caused by a dietary deficiency.

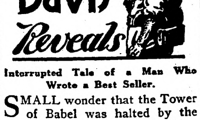
"The practical significance of this finding is that, while we know it is possible to reduce the amount of caries or dental decay by improving the diet, we now know that we cannot prevent decay completely by this last method," Dr. Theodor Rosebury, assistant professor of bacteriology, who conducted the research, writes in Scientific American Magazine. "The reason for this is that a deficient diet is a modifying influence rather than the primary cause of caries, which still remains virtually unknown."

Doctor Rosebury fed five generations of rats "a fully adequate diet." Over a period of three years, the rats continually developed caries. "This result," he explained, "checks with human experience to the extent that we know the disease occurs in human beings healthy in all other respects and giving evidence of adequate nutrition. We can produce caries more rapidly with diets deficient in mineral elements. But no matter how adequate we make the diet, dental caries is still produced."

To Drop In; to Drop Up

Idiomatic phrases in the English language are the despair of foreigners; the phrases so rarely make sense if the words are considered separately. The idiom, "to drop in," meaning to happen in, as for a chat, is well established, and is an accepted part of our speech. "To drop up" is not generally accepted, possibly because of the utter incongruity.—Literary Digest.

Bob Davis Reveals



Interrupted Tale of a Man Who Wrote a Best Seller.

SMALL wonder that the Tower of Babel was halted by the confusion of tongues. Nothing that happened in Babylon was half so bad as the prevalence of wind-bags, all anxious to talk at the same time. It takes a bit of listening to subtract a whole story even when the conversation is in English. For instance:

A fortnight ago I stepped into Cella's restaurant, on East Forty-fifth street, to bid in a tenderloin before Gene Tunney turned up with his bunch of gastronomic gangsters and cornered the market. Too late. He beat me to the punch, so I countered on an English chop, new peas and the fixings, muscling in among others who were likewise occupied. Jo Davidson, modeling an Idaho baked potato into a miniature Taj Mahal, sat opposite me. Edwin Lefevre, down the line, frettted with a salad dressing tainted with just one too many cloves of garlic. Chris Morley had his eye on a fat veal kidney sizzling to be caressed. Paul Pickhardt, a Hollander, who knows his spring onions, was flirting with a platter of them. Everybody talked.

One of Mr. Tunney's guests sprung a new theory for telling the difference between a genuine and a fake pearl. He wound up babbling about the parentage of Alexander Hamilton and the height of a plug hat as compared with a derby. Carl Reed, an engineer who is a nut on molecules, became one in the general confusion of opinions. I heard what he had to say, but didn't understand him.

Rivaled Bible Sales.

At the next table War Correspondent Larry Rue, so close to me that I could hear every word he uttered, was filling the ear of an unsuccessful author with some amazing statistics. "How would you like to have written a book that went into ten million copies?' said Larry, leaning across his broiled chicken.

"You're not referring to the Bible, I hope," replied the author, rather sadly.

"Not at all. Just a simple little volume selling at half a dollar and still in the money, rolling off the press year after year and pulling down the scads even to this day. Nothing more nor less than a simple book issued 28 years ago."

At last something really coherent and entertaining. Shifting my seat I called for black coffee and joined the book-chat boys. "What's this ten million edition stuff, Larry?" I asked.

"Fact. One of those things, absolutely true, that happen without drums, trumpets or ballyhoo. It will open your eye about big editions, best sellers and popular authorship. Here's the dope, with a fine tableau for the curtain. Years ago, out West, to be exact, lived a thoroughbred Yankee school teacher who dedicated his life to matters educational.

Jasper Hunt's Speller.

"His name was Jasper Newton Hunt. Six feet four inches high, stately in manner, the possessor of a flowing white beard and well beyond the three-score-years-and-ten record, he became known as 'The Immortal J. N.' At eighty-two he died, leaving behind several public school textbooks, among them 'Hunt's Progressive Speller,' ten million copies of which have been sold to school children since 1908, the year it was written. So much by way of introduction. Now for the sentimental touch that takes us to Holland, Mich., the home of Paul de Kruif, author of 'The Medicine Men,' 'Microbe Hunters,' etc., and collaborator with Sinclair Lewis in 'Arrowsmith.' Do you know Frazier Hunt, the war correspondent?"

"Better known as 'Spike' by those who love him? Sure. Where does he horn in on this best seller tale?"

"Well, he just happens to be the Immortal J. N's son, and incidentally an old chum of Paul de Kruif, whom he was visiting at Holland, where the pair of them did considerable biking around the countryside. In the course of these rambles during a rainstorm, they took refuge in an abandoned schoolhouse, one of the old red universities, so to speak.

Find Early Copy.

Being nosey by nature, and a bearcat for microbes, De Kruif poked about the premises, coming eventually upon a pile of old school books in a dismantled closet. Among the treasure trove was a copy of "Hunt's Progressive Speller." I needn't describe to you the scene that followed when De Kruif placed the precious volume in Spike's hand. Nor do I intend boring you with further petty details, except to say that Paul and Frazier returned to the De Kruif homestead where, after toasting the great names identified with the bright lexicon of youth in many lands, they built a small mausoleum of cement under a spreading tree hard by the garden and with due ceremony deposited "Hunt's Progressive Speller" in permanent repose. On a single sheet of white paper such as professional scribes use in the preparation of mss., Spike, before the crypt was sealed, wrote this line: 'One of ten million!' and placed it with the best seller."

Rosa Ponselle Breaks Arm While Playing Opera Role

Rosa Ponselle, Metropolitan opera soprano, has a broken left arm as a result of the enthusiasm with which she and Rene Maison, the tenor playing opposite her, enacted their roles in "Carmen" in the company's appearance of the season in Baltimore. The small bone in her left forearm was broken near the elbow when Mr. Maison threw her to the stage floor.

QUAKER STATE MOTOR OIL

The "FIRST QUART" Tells the Story

Out of the experience of thousands of motorists has been developed a simple method of comparing oil performance . . . the "First Quart" Test. It is just a matter of noting how many miles you go after a drain-and-refill before you have to add a quart. If you are obliged to add oil too frequently, try the "First Quart" Test with Quaker State. See if you don't go farther before you have to add that tell-tale first quart. And, the oil that stands up best between refills is giving your motor the safest lubrication. Quaker State Oil Refining Company, Oil City, Pa.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

When there are two lanes of traffic, do you know which one to use for the correct turn? Right turn should be made from the extreme right lane of traffic, keeping close to the curb until the turn is completed.

Left turns are always the more difficult to make. The left turn should be made from the lane of traffic nearest to and immediately to the right of the center of the street center line.

Both right and left turns can be made safely and in good time. There need be no delays but care must be exercised that they are made properly.

Communities can help in eliminating this traffic tie-up and traffic problem by putting in the markings on the road showing the right and left lane in which traffic should travel and turn.

Minnesota anglers are anxiously awaiting the opening of the wall-eyed pike season on Friday, May 15. On the same date the season opens for great northern pike, pickerel, sand pike or saugers, yellow perch, and muskellunge.

The stream trout season, which opened for the rest of the state May 1, will open May 15 in Lake, St. Louis, Itasca, Koochiching, Carlton, and Cook counties.

The limit for muskellunge is two per day; for stream trout 15 per day with 25 trout or 20 pounds allowed in possession.

2 Million Damage To Roads

Minnesota's trunk highway system suffered abnormal damage of more than $2,000,000 this spring as an aftermath of the unusually severe winter, according to figures submitted to Highway Commissioner N. W. Elsberg by maintenance engineers of the state highway department.

This total does not include damage to bridges in recent spring floods nor abnormal expense incurred in plowing snow off the roads this year.

Total abnormal expenditures and road and bridge damage resulting from unusual weather conditions since January 1 this year approximate more than $3,000,000, listed by Mr. Elsberg as follows:

Damage to gravel roads--
--$1,116,000
Bituminous treated gravel roads--$905,000
Shoulders, slopes and ditches--110,000
Bridge and culverts--$200,000
Abnormal snow removal expense--$750,000

"This situation, combined with reduced maintenance funds resulting from lowered automobile license fees, creates a serious situation for the trunk highway system", Mr. Elsberg said. "Federal funds cannot be used for maintenance work, so our expenditures are limited in this field to available state revenues.

"Minnesota's experience with the weather this year should be sufficient proof of the danger in cutting down highway revenues below a reasonable margin of safety. After abnormal cold and snow in the winter, we experienced a spring cloudburst in the southern part of the state. Such contingencies must be provided for or our trunk highway system cannot be satisfactorily maintained."

Conserving Wild Life

Due to the fact that the federal and state governments have spent large sums of money in developing Thief Lake, Mud Lake and Red Lake game refuges, and inasmuch as these areas have been already partially restocked with elk and other game animals and birds, the Minnesota Forest Service will make every effort to keep fires out of those areas. Superintendent Langley, of the Thief Lake camp, in cooperation with the Forest Service, will be in charge of the Thief Lake and Mud Lake areas under the direction of Ranger Earl Gilthvedt and Alfred Oaks will be put on duty as smokechasers in the Moose River and Grygla areas. These men will have strict instructions to use every effort to keep the fires out of the game refuges and state forest areas. All violators will be apprehended and the maximum punishment imposed.

"We believe that the public realizes the inportance of conserving wild life in the above mentioned territories as well as other sections, and we ask your cooperation to see thal this prosection is carried out one hundred per cent," stated Dick Willems, District Ranger.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson of Crookston, Mr. Tyler and Miss Irene Wegge of Fargo, Miss Lucy Wegge and H. Paskewitz of Thief River Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Wegge, Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Wegge were Sunday visitors at the home of Mrs. Louis Wegge.

The Marshall County 4-H play and music contest will be held at the Warren High School auditorium at 6 p. m. Monday evening, May 18. A small admission of ten and fifteen cents will be charged.

County Farm Bureau Meetings

Looking to state legislation for the solution of some of their problems, Minnesota farmers during the next two weeks will pay particular attention to the Farm Bureau's biennial legislative questionnaire, brought out for the benefit of candidates and voters during the spring of each campaign year. The questionnaires will be developed after thorough discussion at the annual spring conferences, which open at Duluth on May 19 and close at Farmington on May 29. After farmers have decided on the form of the questionnaire, it will be presented by County Farm Bureau legislative committees to each candidate for legislative office, and his reply will be returned to the committee, and later filed with the legislative representative of the Minnesota Farm Bureau.

With taxes taking such a big slice of the farm income, it is probable that the coming conference will devote considerable attention to this subject.

Eachconference will be attended by officers of County and Township Farm Bureau units of the six or eight nearest counties. The state office will be represented by F. W. White, president; J. S. Jones, secretary; A. G. Mereness, director of organization; D. A. Williams, manager of the Farm Bureau Service company and Mrs. Lewis Minion, home and community director.

Ten meetings will be held at centrally-located points, with officers of more than a thousand township units and about 70 County Farm Bureaus participating.

Conferences held May 19-23 inclusive will be attended by Chester Gray, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, internationally known for his influence on farm legislation.

Members of the Marshall County Farm Bureau will attend the conference at Warren on on May 21.

B. C. Hagglund of Thief River Falls spent the week end here with relatives.

O. J. Backlund Passed Away

The people of Holt and community were shocked on Wednesday morning to hear of the sudden death of Ole J. Backlund, pioneer resident of this village.

Mr. Backlund had been on the sick list the past year having undergone a major operation last summer. He appeared to be in fair health now but on Saturday he became very ill and was taken to the St. Luke's hospital at Thief River Falls on Sunday. He passed away there at ten o'clock Tuesday evening from complications caused by his old stomach trouble.

Funeral services will be conducted here on Monday at 2 p. m from the Nazareth Lutheran church.

Soil Conservation Meetings

Due to the misunderstading in regard to the operation of the Soil Conservation program further Educational meetings are being scheduled in order to try to clarify the program.

Meetings will be held as follows: Stephen, Monday, May 18; Warren, Saturday, May 23; Alvarado, Wednesday, May 20; Newfolden, Friday, May 22 and Grygla, Tuesday, May 19. All meetings will be held evenings at 8 p. m.

It is impossible to make all points in the county so it is suggested that every one who wishes more information on this program attend the meeting most convenient.

A meeting of all township committees will be held at Warren on Friday, May 15 at 8 p. m. to go over the program in order that they may explain the program to individual farmers.

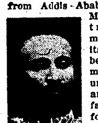
Italy Takes Addis Ababa; the Emperor Flees

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE of Ethiopia gave up the hopeless fight against the Italian invaders and fled from Addis Ababa with his family. Mussolini's victorious troops soon after marched into the capital, the first to enter being a picked regiment representing all units of the Italian army, the Askari, infantry, artillery, air force, engineers, grenadiers, bersaglieri, Alpini, cavalry, marines and Fascist militiamen.



Haile Selassie

Their coming was welcomed by the foreigners who remained in the city, for as soon as the negus left, the natives began to pillage, plunder and burn. The business center of the town was speedily wrecked and the government buildings were stormed and ravaged, these including the treasury from which the state's store of gold was stolen, and the armory. The streets were strewn with corpses and the Ethiopians, crazed by liquor, rushed about shooting at random and gathering up their loot to carry it to the hills.

Only one foreigner was reported killed. That was Mrs. N. A. Stadin, American wife of an Adventist missionary, who was struck by a stray bullet. Nearly all other foreigners were gathered in the well fortified British legation, but American Minister Cornelius Van H. Engert with his wife and the male members of the staff remained in the American compound. They were armed only with rifles and pistols and were under orders from Secretary of State Hull not to risk their lives uselessly; but they were determined to hold the legation and radio station as long as possible. This plucky little group was attacked repeatedly by marauders but repulsed all onslaughts. Mr. Engert was in wireless communication with Washington. The British legation offered to send a detachment of Sikhs to escort the Americans to the British compound, but Mr. Engert declined to leave his legation at that time. Next day he and his staff evacuated the compound.

Haile Selassie went by train to Djibouti, French Somaliland, and was received with all honors at the governor's palace. He and his family boarded the British cruiser Enterprise and sailed for Palestine.

At first it was rumored the French would hold him for a time, but later advices said the French and British governments had decided that he remained a sovereign and must have full liberty of movement.

So ends the military part of Mussolini's African adventure, a success despite the opposition of the League of Nations and the imposition of economic and financial penalties. The duce announced the victory to his country from the chamber of deputies and there was wild rejoicing throughout Italy. It is taken for granted Mussolini will set up an Amharic state in part of Ethiopia under a puppet emperor; and presumably Italy, France and Great Britain will get together and determine their respective zones of influence in the ancient empire. The humiliated league can do nothing except lift the existing sanctions, which proved futile in halting the war. British Foreign Minister Eden and his fellows in the government must admit as gracefully as possible their failure to check Mussolini and get what they can for Britain out of the African tragedy. France probably is not sorry over the outcome, for her opposition to the duce's ambitious scheme always was half-hearted.

Vandenberg's Name Is to Be Presented

SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan has asked Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of that state to present his name to the Republican convention in Cleveland for the Presidential nomination, but the senator insists this does not make him an active candidate.

Senator Vandenberg

"The Michigan state convention generously instructed the Michigan delegation in Cleveland to present my name," the senator said. "But the delegation is unpledged—at my request. It is free to vote as it pleases. I have not sought a delegation here or elsewhere and I shall not do so. I have not sought the nomination and shall not do so. My situation is not changed in the slightest."

Friends of Senator Borah in Utah tried unsuccessfully for a Borah pledged delegation from that state. The Republican state convention in Ogden voted to send an uninstructed group to Cleveland, following the recommendation of the resolutions committee.

The Arkansas delegation also will be uninstructed, though the state convention approved an "expression of good will" toward Gov. Alf Landon.

Col. Henry Breckenridge, who offered himself to the Democrats as a Presidential nominee aspirant merely so that disaffected members of the party might have some place to go, received about one-seventh of the votes in the Maryland preference primary. The rest, of course, went to Mr. Roosevelt. Colonel Breckenridge had made no campaign.

Radicals Control French Chamber of Deputies

FINAL elections in France put complete control of the chamber of deputies in the hands of the revolutionary "Popular Front," a coalition of Communists, Socialists, Radical Socialists and minor left wing groups. The new chamber does not meet until June, and the confusion is so great that there are fears of chaos and financial panic in the interim. Many believe the Popular Front will be unable to form a stable government to succeed that of Premier Sarraut. The lead must be taken by the Socialists, for they now form the largest group in the chamber with 146 seats. The Radical Socialists have 115, the Communists 72 and minor left parties 44. The National bloc, including center and right parties opposed to the leftists, have 236 seats.

Senator Hastings Will Not Seek Re-election

DANIEL O. HASTINGS, senator from Delaware, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee and outspoken opponent of the New Deal, will not seek re-election when his present term expires. He so announced in a letter to the party leaders of his state, giving as his reason the necessity to devote himself to his law practice. This may have influenced his decision, but it is more than suspected that the real reason was the fact that the du Pont family, all-powerful in Delaware Republican politics, had decided that the senatorial seat should go to Gov. C. Douglas Buck, who is related to the du Ponts by marriage. Senator Hastings has always been ready and eloquent in defense of the du Ponts against attacks by the New Dealers.

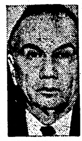
Navy Expansion Measure Passed by the House

SINCE international naval disarmament efforts have failed, those who advocate adequate national defense rejoice in the passage by the house of the bill appropriating approximately $531,000,000 to build our navy up to treaty strength. Representative Marcantonio of New York and a few others put up loud opposition, but a record vote was not necessary. The objectors dwelt especially on a clause authorizing the laying of keels for two 35,000 ton battleships after January 1, 1937, should any foreign signatory to the London naval treaty start a battleship replacement program. Two days later they might have read dispatches from London saying rumors had reached there that Japan was considering laying down a 55,000 ton battleship armed with 21-inch guns.

Appropriations in the bill, along with other available funds, will give the navy a total of $592,237,807 for the next fiscal year, starting July 1.

Business Men Differ With Mr. Roper

DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, appeared before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting in Washington and warned its members, most of whom are persistent critics of New Deal policies, that unless private enterprise takes up the slack in employment, business must pay the relief bill out of earnings.



Sec. Roper

"It is the responsibility of all business and industrial enterprises," said Roper, "and not of one particular segment of the government to increase its efforts for greater employment. If a substantial measure of increased re-employment does not take place the taxation for relief purposes will come largely from business earnings. There must be re-employment or a longer period of increased taxation."

Roper admitted that the administration had fostered bureaucracy, but insisted that it was occasioned by an emergency, and responsibility for its increase again lay at the door of private business.

Various members of the chamber replied spiritedly. Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National bank of Chicago, predicted that if the administration embarked on a sound fiscal program that would inspire confidence, business would make rapid strides toward recovery. He criticized the pending tax on corporate earnings as impracticable and a brake on business expansion and stability.

Huge New Tax Measure Rushed Through House

WITH extraordinary speed which the opposition considered indecent, the administration's new $803,000,000, revenue bill was pushed through the house. The vote, 267 to 93, was almost strictly along party lines. The roll call showed 82 Republicans and only 11 Democrats voted against the measure, while four Republicans deserted the minority to cast their lot with the administration.

Sen. Harrison

The bill was handed to the senate whose finance committee, headed by Pat Harrison, had been studying it in secret sessions in order to be prepared for the public hearings that opened two days after the house had acted. There had been predictions that this committee would modify the measure radically, but the opposition to it in Democratic ranks seemed to have faded away and its passage by the senate without material change was deemed probable.

As passed by the house the bill provides:

1. A graduated tax on corporation income which, it is estimated, will force distribution of $3,360,000,000 more in dividends and yield the government an additional $620,000,000 annually.

2. A "windfall" tax on unpaid or refunded processing taxes imposed under the invalidated AAA, which is expected to yield $100,000,000.

3. Continuation of the capital stocks and excess profits taxes for six months to yield $35,000,000.

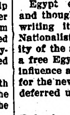
4. A refund of $35,000,000 to processors who suffered financial losses under the old AAA.

Hagood Holds New Command One Day, Then Retires

MAJ. GEN. JOHNSON HAGOOD, assigned to the command of the Sixth corps area with headquarters at Chicago, held the command only one day, as a matter of form, and then at his own request was relieved of the assignment and retired from active service. He said he would remain in Chicago several months to do some special work for a mail order house and then would select a permanent residence and write a book telling "how the United States can get a very much better national defense at very much less cost to the taxpayer."

Young Farouk Succeeds to Egyptian Throne

FUAD I, king of Egypt, died of a gangrenous throat infection at his country place near Cairo at the age of sixty-eight. The crown prince, Farouk, a sixteen-year-old pupil in the royal military academy at Woolwich, England, was immediately proclaimed king and started for Egypt, sailing from Marseilles on a British liner escorted by a British warship in order to avoid going by way of Italy.



King Farouk.

Before his death Fuad named a regency council of three to govern the country until Farouk comes of age. The young king, who is six feet tall and well educated, hopes to return to England to complete his studies at Woolwich.

Egypt elected a new parliament, and though returns are not in at this writing it is believed the Wafd or Nationalist party won a clear majority of the seats. The Wafdists demand a free Egypt, completely rid of British influence and control. The negotiations for the new Anglo-Egyptian treaty were deferred until after the election.

Bringing Back CCC to Its Authorized Strength

DIRECTOR ROBERT FECHNER of the Civilian Conservation corps moved to bring the corps up to its authorized strength of 350,000 by ordering state enrollment officers to disregard previous quotas and accept any qualified boy from a relief family.

At the same time, Fechner authorized enrollments in eight southern states omitted from the original schedule, while the War department ordered corps area commandants to report on the number of recruits needed in each state.

Estimating that between 30,000 and 35,000 new members would be required, Fechner attributed slowness of enrollments to improving business conditions. Vacancies also exist for 4,000 war veterans.

Urges New Compact on Neutrality and Rights

THROUGH Secretary of State Hull the United States has suggested the conclusion of a general convention to supplement and clarify existing rules governing the rights and duties of neutrals in wartime. The proposal is made to the nations that will take part in the American peace conference in Buenos Aires this year, but is intended to be open to all other nations in the world.

Hello Everybody!

"April Fool's Tragedy"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU'VE all heard about the girl who plays a man like a fish on a line. Well, here's a case where that situation was reversed. Distinguished Adventurer Patricia Root, of New York city, has come here to tell the story of how a man once played her like a fish on a line.

What's more, Pat Root isn't a bit sore about it. As a matter of fact, she's darned grateful to the guy. She would have died if he hadn't—well—sort of made a sucker out of her. Fish lines can be pretty tough on fish, but this one meant life to Patricia.

It happened on April Fool's day in 1933—and you can forget about the date, because there's no fooling about this adventure. Pat was visiting in the Virgin Islands, way down in the West Indies, and as our story opens, she and five other people were starting out to go tarpon fishing.

"But not tarpon fishing as most people picture it," says Pat. "We set out in a boat from the island of St. Thomas to Thatch Cay, a small key about a mile off shore. But there we left the boat, for we were going to do our fishing from the shore."

Pat Began Tarpon Fishing From a Rocky Ledge.

Pat was just fifteen at the time. The others were older. There was John and his wife, Maria, Carl, and two native Virgin Islanders, Wilmot and Paul. They crossed the key to a spot where a high cliff ran right down into the sea. There was a little ledge at the base of the cliff just big enough for one person to fish from. And there they fished for the big, hundred-pound fighting tarpon, taking turns with the line down there on that narrow ledge.

It was late afternoon before it came Pat's turn to fish. She clambered down to the ledge and was a bit frightened at the way the waves boiled up, almost to the spot where she was standing.

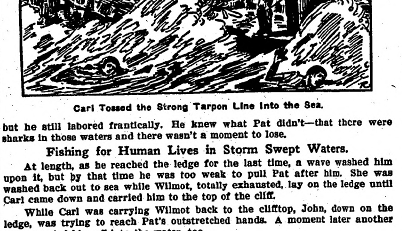
Says she: "We should never have gone fishing that day. There was a ground sea running and a ground sea has a peculiar motion. None of us had noticed that the ocean was getting rougher. At least, I didn't, until I turned to look up at the others sitting on the top of the cliff and suddenly found myself engulfed in water."

She Was Washed Into the Shark Infested Sea.

A huge wave had leapt up and flooded the ledge Pat was standing on. Before she could catch herself she was washed off into the deep water. "For the moment," she says, "I didn't realize the terrible hopelessness of my position. I heard a splash beside me and saw Wilmot come to the surface. He had jumped from the top of the cliff.

"Wilmot put an arm around me and swam with me toward the ledge. We reached it—clutched to it desperately—but neither of us could climb the sheer, precipitous side of the rock wall that led to it. It was only then that I realized that we couldn't get back on shore again."

Again and again, Wilmot carried Pat to the cliffside, but each time the dashing waves washed them back. Wilmot's strength was beginning to fail him, but he still labored frantically. He knew what Pat didn't—that there were sharks in those waters and there wasn't a moment to lose.



Carl Tossed the Strong Tarpon Line Into the Sea.

Fishing for Human Lives in Storm Swept Waters.

At length, as he reached the ledge for the last time, a wave washed him upon it, but by that time he was too weak to pull Pat after him. She was washed back out to sea while Wilmot, totally exhausted, lay on the ledge until Carl came down and carried him to the top of the cliff.

While Carl was carrying Wilmot back to the clifftop, John, down on the ledge, was trying to reach Pat's outstretched hands. A moment later another wave carried him off into the water, too.

The waves were now rising so high that it was dangerous to stand on the ledge. But Carl tried it. No sooner had he carried Wilmot to the top of the cliff than he started down again, this time with a strong tarpon line in his hand. He tossed that into the water. John caught it and looped it around Pat. "It got twisted around my neck," Pat says, "and for a moment I just hung there. A wave covered me and the line fell off. When I came up, I caught it again and twisted it around my finger."

And then began the queerest bit of life-saving you ever saw. Up on the ledge stood Carl, fishing rod in his hand, slowly bringing Pat in toward shore as if she were a fish. That line wasn't strong enough to sustain her weight, so Carl "played" her—reeling in as she rose on the crest of a wave, and letting the line out as she fell again.

The Waves Finally Tossed Her Up to Safety.

Minutes passed while this strange game went on. Pat began to wonder if Carl would ever get her ashore. She was sore and bruised where the waves had dashed her body against the rocks. The thin line wrapped around her hand was all but cutting her fingers in two. "I was beginning to bleed from my arms," she says, "when I heard John shout for help three times. Then there came a long silence. I didn't know it then, but John was done for. A shark had gotten him."

More minutes passed. Pat was gasping for breath—ready to faint from the torture of that cutting line. Then Carl took a desperate chance. Shouting to her to keep up her courage he began to reel in the line. Inch by inch she neared the ledge. It was almost within her reach—she had her hand on it. Then, at the crucial moment, a wave came to her rescue and washed her bodily up on the ledge.

Carl carried her back to the top of the cliff, bruised, exhausted and covered with blood. "Since that day," says Pat, "I have forgotten the real meaning of April Fool's day. To me it has become the anniversary of an awful tragedy."

February Called Cabbage Month; Later Sun Month

The ancient Saxons called February Sproutkale, or the Sprouting of the Cabbage. Later, this was changed to Sunmonath, or sunmonth, because it was at this period that daylight increased and the pruning of trees began.

The word February comes from the Latin, "februare," meaning "to expiate," because, during this month the Roman ceremony of purification took place. Originally, it was the last month of the year, and not until 452 B. C. did February assume its present place.

When Julius Caesar reformed the calendar, he gave 31 days to each alternate month from January, and 30 to the others, with the exception of February, which got 30 in leap year and 29 every other year. But when Augustus took power, he was unwilling that the month named after him should be shorter than those on either side, so he took a day from February and added it to August. So that three months of 31 days should not run consecutively, he reversed the other two.

Must Think First

"Mr. Goudy, the great typographer when he was asked how he designed a new font of type, brooded a while and then he said, 'Why, you think of a letter and draw around it.' But whatever method the writer adopts, or finds forced upon him, his first problem is to teach himself to think; and to find audience which is hospitable to thought."—Christopher Morley.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer.

He caught Mr. Crowell inspecting the tag sewn onto the back of his waistcoat. Well, that was all right, and, of course, nothing could be wrong, when the trousers were to be sent by parcel post to "John Clarke Ridder, Jr." at Southampton. Before the Duke departed, Mr. Crowell had secured orders for a sack suit and evening clothes. "Charge 'em to my father," the Duke said, and Mr. Crowell answered, "Certainly, and I'll let you know when we're ready to try on."

This procedure, and those following at the haberdasher's and the shoemaker's, ruffled the Duke's conscience far less than the hundred-dollar bill had done. "I'll pay it all back some day," he thought, without asking himself how.

On the return trip to Southampton, it struck him that he'd got a pretty extensive wardrobe for one dinner party. "Well," he argued, "suppose I do stay a month. I might as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb, and nothing much can happen before my father's return—unless the real John Clarke Junior changes his mind about writing to Bad Nauheim."

Of course, the Judge might write—to felicitate the old man on having made it up with his boy. What then? That wouldn't tell them that this wasn't the same boy. Still it might be safer to hint to the Hambidges that the Ridders were going to wander about a bit before arriving at their destination.

The Duke leaned back in the Long Island Railway's best parlor car, and opened a newspaper he had bought at the station. Almost instantly, he saw his new friend's name again. "Jefferson Street Condemnation Just Another Grab," the headline ran. "Civic Association Brands Proceedings Before Judge Hambidge as Bare-faced Loot of City Treasury."

"They're certainly making it hot for him," Barry mused.

He wouldn't have read the story, but for its reference to the Judge. Even so, he read it very casually. Somebody wanted to turn a side street into a boulevard. That involved buying a lot of property. And the property owners weren't willing to sell for what the city was willing to pay, so "condemnation proceedings had been instituted"—whatever they might be—and Judge Hambidge was to fix the value of the ground and houses.

"Who really owns this property?" the Civic association asked. The corporation that held title was an obvious stalking-horse. It had been formed, and had purchased the land, and buildings, only a few months before the beginning of municipal interest in Jefferson street. And it was demanding a million and a half for "a few relics of a better day in this neighborhood that would have been dear at half a million." Tammany's paw was visible in the whole transaction, according to the Civic association, and the impending decision called for prompt action from individuals and organizations aware that Judge Hambidge was a Tammany judge.

"Prompt action?" Swell chance! Who cared? Plainly, the tax-payers didn't, and Barry wasn't even a taxpayer. As a couple of million other citizens were to do that evening, he dismissed the whole matter from his mind, and turned the page, looking for a good murder.

Reaching home, he went straight to the library.

The winter covers had been removed from the furniture now, and the place was bright and shining. The Italian box had been filled with cigars. Bending over to get one, the Duke's gaze fell upon an envelope addressed to his other self.

A radio message! His fingers stiffened.

The Judge hadn't waited to write. Damn Marconi! Feverishly, he tore open the wrapper.

"Just to let you know that I am very happy stop couldn't sleep last night for thinking of you home at last stop can't tell your father yet stop please please try to spend summer in such a way as to make reconciliation possible stop praying for word on arrival stop God bless you and love.

"Mother."

For once, the Duke didn't grin.

"She didn't care what it cost," he said, but there was no humor in that comment. He was picturing a hurried, heart-hungry woman, slipping furtively up to the wireless room, and handing in this message herself, so that no steward should unwittingly betray her. The first word she had been able to smuggle to the boy in years. "It's been killing your mother," the Judge had said.

The Duke touched a button, and Willetts came.

"Where's Evans?"

"In the garage, sir. With his wife."

"Ask him to run me down to the village. I want to send a telegram to my mother."

"I can telephone it, sir."

"Thanks; I'd rather hand it in."

"Very good, sir. The car'll be here in a minute or two, sir. And I'll hold dinner."

Barry never thought any harder than he did during that short ride.

What could he say that would make his mother still happier, and yet mean nothing if the message fell into the hands of that hard, old man?

In all probability, his father knew the house had been opened. Must know, since he had forbidden Evans to bring his wife. Well, then, suppose the telegram were signed "Willetts," but contained a reference that would identify the real sender—to her, and to no one else?

A Radio Message! His Fingers Stiffened.

"Radio received," he wirelessed at last. "Will do my best. Writing. Willetts."

She would understand.

The reaction came after dinner. "Maudlin, that's what I am," thought the Duke. "Just because I get a message signed 'Mother.' The first one I ever got."

"Damn fool trick — sending that wireless. Sooner or later, she's going to find out it was fake, and then what good will I have done?"

Thursday's dinner started off on the wrong foot.

The Duke wore his new flannels and his old gray coat. It was not a warm evening, but he had nothing else to wear. His father's apparel was much too tight.

He could see Patricia taking him in. She was lovely in cherry-colored crepe de chine, and the Judge immaculate in black tie and dinner jacket. "You said we could fight things out on the tennis court," the Duke apologized, "and I'm afraid that stuck in my mind. The truth is my luggage hasn't turned up, and I had to wear anything I could find."

"You should have worn a strip of bunting, and brought boxing gloves," the Judge laughed. "If you and Pat are going at it as you did at the club."

"What would happen if we agreed about anything?" asked Patricia.

"I'd be wrong, Miss Hambidge; I'd be wrong!"

The retort was no more his own than the shirt on his back, but he was rewarded for it by an appreciative flash in the girl's eyes.

But they couldn't agree.

How was it possible, the Duke asked himself afterward, to be so fascinated by a young woman who opposed his every idea and utterance? And so—well, so cockily. As though it amused her to be irritating.

The girl chattered about everything. Hard-boiled. A modern, and proud of it. Why should people be proud of being "modern"; a state, like kingship, that you achieved merely by being born? And, so far as modernity was a point of view, why preen yourself because you didn't believe in anything except your own right to be happy?

This girl had had no contact with life. Walled about in a pleasant garden, she delivered herself of smart, brittle opinions of conditions she had never experienced, people she had never seen. But you couldn't help liking her. And it began to be evident that she liked him. "You're different, at least," she said. "Different from any other man I know. Really not a bit like a rich man's son."

"I've been on my own a good while," he reminded her.

"Yes," she answered. "You've something to talk about. When my set's through with golf, bridge, the stock market, and the night clubs, it's through!"

Barry learned a good deal about his adopted father that night. And, when Patricia left them for a few minutes, the Judge repeated, "He's certainly no sentimentalist—that gentleman. We're supposed to be friends, and his paper goes on attacking me. The Civic association—that's nothing on earth but The Globe. And now they're all at it. Talking about my taking orders from Tammany. Generally, it wouldn't matter, but this Jefferson street business has got everybody so worked up, it's all a man's career's worth just to be caught nodding to a District Leader."

Barry nodded. "Did you ever speak to the old man?"

"Just a few days before he left. 'I'm running my newspaper for the public,' he said."

"What's the use of stopping one paper?" Patricia inquired, entering the room. "The others would keep right on. Did you ever read any of the things they wrote about Abraham Lincoln? Be a brave old gentleman, and don't let it bother you."

She laughed, but her eyes were very tender as she laid her hands on the Judge's shoulders.

"That's why I like her," thought the Duke. "Because I see what she'd be if somebody scraped off the enamel. She's got the makings of some girl!"

It was after midnight when Barry climbed into his car, calling back, "Remember, you're dining with me next Thursday!"

"You certainly took father out of himself," the girl had remarked to him. "He's been frightfully depressed."

"Let's see a lot of one another," the Duke had rejoined. "I'm lonely as an oyster in a church stew. Why not come to my place next Thursday?"

"All right. And we're having house guests over the following week-end. The Winslows. My mother was Mrs. Winslow's sister. Peter's a prominent lawyer, and it won't hurt you to know him. And I've got an old school friend coming from Boston. Will you dine with us again that Friday?"

"I'll board with you, if you ask me!" Barry replied exuberantly. "But that lets me out," he vowed, on the way home. "This can't go on forever. Something's sure to break, and I don't want it to break anywhere near that girl. What she learns when I'm gone won't hurt either of us, but—Gosh—I'd hate having to face her after she'd found out the truth!"

However, Southampton was not only ruining his "appetite for baked beans"; it was ruining his taste for the open road, and rough-necks.

Standing before the mirror, in faultless evening dress, on Thursday, he thought the thing out. "If I can't get a white-collar job with these clothes, and the new feeling this thing has given me, I'm a wash-out. I'd like to make good now. Darned if I know why, but I would!"

He made up his mind to go to town the next day, and have another try at it. "I'll take a shot at the movie studios," he said. "There ought to be something in heroes for a young fellow who looks like that."

He was still contemplating himself in the glass, with a view to his picture possibilities, when the Hambidges arrived.

On the whole, it was a very successful evening. The Judge seemed even more worried than he had been a week before, but Barry's good humor was irresistible. Patricia had asked about his experience in Florida, and he found himself combining purely imaginary adventures there with anecdotes of park benches and the flop house in New York. He told of arriving, penniless at Southampton and of the providential hundred-dollar bill that came addressed to his mother. Truth and fiction blended so wonderfully, and seemed so real.

The Hambidges went home early, but in much better spirits than they had brought with them, and Patricia paused at the door to remind him of their engagement for the following Friday. "You'll have to come the week after that, too," she said. "My Boston friend can't get here next week, and she's especially anxious to meet you."

Patricia must have written about him, then. By Golly, he would get that job—if only to show her that he could do something better than dance.

It was twenty minutes later before the Duke realized suddenly that the exigencies of the situation weren't going to allow his showing Pat anything but a clean pair of heels.

Barry's first two days in town were fruitless. There weren't many studios in New York, and they didn't seem to be doing much. "Acting isn't a man's job, anyway," said the Duke. "Painting your face, and putting a feather in your hat! I'm going to look over the 'Business Opportunities' in the newspapers."

Most of them were opportunities to part with a little money. But Barry didn't give up hope.

The "Laughing Jackass"

Strangers to Australia may hear what sounds like the braying of a jackass in the woods. Investigation, however, will disclose a sassy-looking, colorful bird on the order of the kingfisher, but much larger. It is the kookaburra, native to Australia, one of the brightest and most mischievous birds living. It is known as the "laughing jackass," because of its braying note, and as the "settler's clock," because it utters its peculiar cry regularly at dawn and at dusk. It eats insects, snakes and small mammals, killing the larger prey by flying high with its victim in its beak and dropping it to destruction.

1. To hear as little as possible what is to the prejudice of others. 2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am absolutely forced to it. 3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report. 4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others. 5. Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Charles Simeon.

Only That and Nothing More

The fat man was trying to find some tropical clothes in the Far South resort. He tried most every store in town, and patient clerks had politely made a pretense of looking over their stocks and advising him they were just out of his size. Finally he ran across a clerk more truthful than diplomatic who—after looking him over—said:

"Frankly, mister, we carry nothing in stock that would fit you, except collar buttons and handkerchiefs."—American Legion Monthly.

In a Nutshell

The theater was in an uproar.

"They're calling for the author," said the manager.

"But I can't make a speech!" replied the man responsible for the play.

The manager grabbed the playwright and impelled him along the passage. As he shoved him toward the curtain he said curtly: "Well, just go in front and tell them you're sorry."—Hudson (N. Y.) Star.

Hungry Dog

By SIDNEY MELLAR

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

ONE night, lounging alone before the fireplace, I heard a sound at the door, a sound of scratching. "Who's there?" I cried. There was no answer.

Again the scratching and the whine! I went to the door, opened it. A police dog lay outside, quivering.

The mellow light from my two-room bungalow fell upon him, and I saw how weary he seemed, how his ribs showed through his short, stiff fur. He looked as if he were starving.

It was cold at the door so I whistled and he followed me into my living room. Patiently he sank down before the fireplace, his head relaxing over one outstretched paw. Years before, I'd had a police dog that resembled him.

Then I went into the kitchen. There was no meat in the food-safe, but there were eggs. I broke two eggs into a soup plate, beat them up, poured on some milk. Into this mixture I crumbled a slice of stale wheat bread. What else? In the vegetable bin I found tomatoes and lettuce, shredded some of these and mixed all together.

When I stepped from the kitchen into the living room, the police dog sniffed the combination that was in my hand. He stood up, his tail lashing excitedly, his tongue dancing from his mouth. "Sit down!" I ordered.

Reluctantly he sat down. His body writhed with anxiety. I admitted to myself that he was a handsome beast, his ears up, attentive, hungry yet obedient.

I set the plate upon a newspaper, and the dog arose rebelliously. I had to make him learn who was master, so I ordered him to sit down. Unwillingly he obeyed. He smacked his jaws together, saliva drooling from his mouth.

"O. K.," I said. He stared at me appealingly, not sure of my meaning. I nodded, and he bounded to his food and swallowed hastily. He was gulping entirely too fast. I bent down to pick up the plate. He turned on me.

"Down!" I cried, holding the plate in my hand. He bared his fangs. I sympathized with him. He was starved. But he'd have to learn who was master immediately, so I snarled at him, "S-sit down!" Slowly, slowly his haunches sank.

Picking up the plate, still half full of food, I put it on the library table. He watched me sadly. Even now he was powerful, tired and hungry though he might be. I bent over his collar, but it held no license plate. He wagged his tail and wanted to lick my wrist.

There was a knock at the door. The dog stood up, growling. His ears pricked forward and his black nose sniffed.

"Who's there?" I called.

"Did you see a dog anywhere about?" cried a voice in return. The dog whined.

My heart fell. The dog was being claimed.

I opened the door. A man entered. He was wizened, with shifty eyes and sneery lip. "Is this the dog?" I asked.

"Yes. Hello, Ringy!" The dog went to him.

"He seems pretty hungry," I said. "If you'll wait a minute or two, I'll give him something more to eat. I have it all prepared for him."

The man kicked the door shut behind him and sneered, "You'll give him and me more than something to eat."

"Come, come," I said, approaching. "What's the meaning of this?"

"Stop!" he warned sharply. "Come one step closer, and I'll order Ringy to tear you to pieces. This dog is trained. He's my side-kick on a new angle of hand-me-over. You can tell it to the police after you gimme your jack and I beat it."

I had about seventy-five dollars, and that wasn't a trifle for me to lose, but the worst ache was to surrender to this thief. The muscles in my arms itched. I wanted to leap at him.

"Well? Hand over your money before I count ten or I'll take it off your body after Ringy's through with you. One. . . . Two. . . ."

I thought fast. My heart was pounding in my ears. My breath was disordered. I cried out: "Hold on!"

"Ready?" he sneered, one hand out negligently.

"There's a trick you didn't think of!" I cried, running desperately to the library table.

"At him, Ringy! At him!" screamed the thief frantically. Ringy charged. He was almost on me as I tore the plate of food from the table. I reached the door to the kitchen and flung the plate upon the floor. Ringy bounded in after the food and I shut the door behind him.

Then I faced the cowering thief.

Death-Spray Too Dangerous

Fears that arsenic dust sprayed from airplanes to combat the great locust plague in South Africa would bring death to big game and domestic cattle have proved to be only too well grounded, according to reports reaching the British Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire. Preliminary experiments had indicated that the danger would be small. Experience has shown, however, that the poison clouds have not only been fatal to animals but to large numbers of insectivorous birds, particularly the migrant European stork. "This picture," the society's journal says, "alters the whole aspect of the supposed efficacy of the method, for the army of insectivorous birds inhabiting the regions invaded by locusts would in any year undoubtedly destroy more locusts than are poisoned by arsenic."

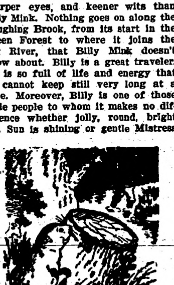
BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BILLY MINK BECOMES SUSPICIOUS

OF ALL the little people in the Green Forest there is none with sharper eyes, and keener wits than Billy Mink. Nothing goes on along the Laughing Brook, from its start in the Green Forest to where it joins the Big River, that Billy Mink doesn't know about. Billy is a great traveler. He is so full of life and energy that he cannot keep still very long at a time. Moreover, Billy is one of those little people to whom it makes no difference whether jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun is shining or gentle Mistress Moon has taken his place up in the sky, or the Black Shadows have wrapped everything in darkness. He takes a nap whenever he feels sleepy, and whenever he doesn't feel sleepy he travels up and down the Laughing Brook.



Billy Mink Followed the Man Down the Laughing Brook.

In these little journeys back and forth nothing escapes Billy's bright eyes and sharp ears and keen nose. Being such a slim fellow he slips in and out of holes and hiding places which no one save his cousin, Shadow the Weasel, could get into.

Now it happened that one day Billy curled up in a hollow log under a pile of brush close to the Laughing Brook. In a jiffy he was asleep. Right in the middle of the pleasantest of pleasant dreams he was awakened. Instantly he was wide awake. He was just as wide awake as if he hadn't been asleep at all. Without stopping to think anything about it, he knew what had awakened him. Some one had just passed his hiding place.

Noiselessly Billy crept out of the hollow log and peeped from under the pile of brush. Walking down the bank of the Laughing Brook was a man. "I've never seen that fellow before," muttered Billy to himself. "It isn't Farmer Brown's Boy, and it isn't Farmer Brown. He seems to be looking for something. I wonder what he is about. I think I'll watch him."

So, as silently as a shadow, Billy Mink followed the man down the Laughing Brook, and the man didn't once suspect it. You see, Billy can always find a hiding place if it be no more than a heap of brown leaves. He just slipped from one hiding place to another, always keeping the man in sight.

Billy became more and more interested and inquisitive as he watched that man. The man certainly did seem to be looking for something. He would examine every half sunken log in the Laughing Brook. He searched carefully every little hole. It didn't take Billy long to discover that this man seemed to be especially interested in those places where Billy almost always went when traveling up and down the Laughing Brook.

Billy stopped and rubbed his nose thoughtfully. He was growing suspicious. "I wonder," thought Billy, "if he is looking for me."

MAGICAL CORKS

THE magician displays a small cardboard box. He opens it and reveals two small corks inside. He closes the box, shakes it and reopens it. The corks have multiplied. There are four instead of two.

The box is prepared beforehand. Boxes of this type, obtainable at any drug store, actually consist of two lids, with a ring or collar between.

In the upper lid the magician glues two corks. He drops two loose corks in the lower portion. Thus, in performing the trick, he begins by showing only two corks, not revealing those that are attached to the lid which he removes.

Closing the box, the magician shakes it. In so doing he turns over the box. The lid which he lifts is the original bottom of the box. Thus the box contains four corks.

ORDINARY DISHES

THE cook who can present an ordinary dish in an extraordinary way is a genius. Many of our homely dishes with a bit of pep in the form of different flavors for seasoning, will become quite unusual dishes.

Beef Stew.

Take two and one-half pounds of chuck steak, wipe it with a damp cloth and cut into one and one-half inch squares. Heat four tablespoonfuls of suet in a Scotch kettle, add the meat and brown well. Season with salt, paprika, a few dashes of cayenne, one-half cupful of diced celery and three tablespoonfuls of chopped onions. Cover with eight cupfuls of cold water, cover tightly and cook two and one-half hours. During the last 45 minutes add the following vegetables sprinkled with salt to season: Six medium-sized potatoes, six each of carrots and parsnips, scraped. When ready to serve thicken the stew with melted butter, adding flour and the stock from the stew. Cook well and pour over the meat and vegetables. Serve all together on a hot platter.

Here is something new, if you like apples, and who does not?

Apple Jam.

Take four pounds of apples, peel and cut into slices. Place in a kettle with a two-pound can of corn sirup and two pounds of sugar, the juice and rind of two lemons, three ounces of ground ginger and six cloves. Cook slowly two hours. Put into a marmalade jar and cover tightly.

Chocolate Mousse.

Melt three squares of chocolate, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of thin cream; boil one minute. Cool, add a teaspoonful of vanilla, a pinch of salt and the whip from three cupfuls of heavy cream. Add a tablespoonful of gelatin mixed with one-fourth of a cupful of cold water to the hot chocolate and mix all together after the gelatin is well dissolved. Pour into a mold and pack in ice and salt for four hours.

AT DAWN SOME DAY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LET us arise at dawn some day,
Not even wash and put away
The breakfast things, but leave a few
Behind for lazy folks to do,
Let us arise and see this earth
The moment of its daily birth,
Up yonder hilltop let us hike,
See what a rising sun is like.

The woodlands will be dewy wet,
But every flower diamond-set,
The morning breeze a little chill,
But we won't mind who climb a hill
The waking thrushes caroling,
But you have never heard one sing
Until you hear one sing to greet
Another morning cool and sweet.

The bluest blue the distant scene,
The woods around the greenest green,
The whitest white the sandy beach,
And heaven near enough to reach,
For thus are waters, woods and skies
When morning calls and earth replies,
When first the shadows slip away—
Let us arise at dawn some day.

Cured Cross Eyes

As far back as he or anyone else can remember, William Hawkins, Lagrange (Ga.) negro, was cross-eyed. Recently he was run down by a truck, suffering injuries about the head that sent him to a hospital. His injuries healed, the bandages were removed from over his eyes and about his head. To the amazement of the doctors, nurses and William, himself, it was discovered his eyes were perfectly normal and uncrossed.

WILL MARK SITE OF AARON BURR'S PLOT

Blennerhasset Island to Be Site of Memorial.

Chicago.—Historic Blennerhasset island in the Ohio river, rich in early American lore, is to be converted into a park as the fulfillment of a lifelong ambition.

Amos Kilgore Gordon, Standard Oil official, who roamed the island 50 years ago as a boy, recently added the remainder of the island to the 40-acre farm that had been in possession of his family since 1827, says the Chicago Tribune.

Gordon said the historical traditions of the island interested him when he was a boy. Largest and most fertile in the Ohio river, the island became the home of Harmon Blennerhassett, wealthy Irish immigrant who came to America in 1797 to escape the turmoil in Ireland. Blennerhassett's became far-famed as a "paradise in the Ohio."

Burr Visited Island.

It was there that Aaron Burr in 1806, just out of office as Vice President of the United States, met Blennerhassett and interested him in a scheme for creating an empire in the West.

Blennerhassett, tired of scholarly seclusion at his retreat, joined the conspiracy. He furnished boats and provisions for an expedition and traveled with Burr in the South and West attempted to raise a following.

But disaster soon overtook the expedition. In 1806 President Thomas Jefferson issued a warning to citizens against Burr's designs and demanded that he be brought to justice.

In December of the same year, Cowles Mead, secretary of the Mississippi territory, issued a proclamation for the arrest of the conspirators.

Blennerhassett, financially ruined, sought refuge in one place and then another. Finally, despairing of repairing his fortunes in this country, he went to Montreal, then to England and finally to the Island of Guernsey, where he died in 1831.

Noted for Beauty.

In 1827, Gordon's grandfather, George Neal, Jr., bought 140 acres on the island when the Blennerhasset estate was settled. Recently, at Parkersburg, W. Va., Gordon purchased the remaining acres on the island.

During the Civil war the island alternately was in the hands of Union and Confederate soldiers. A large hollow sycamore tree, estimated to be 400 years old, was used by soldiers in hiding.

Even in Colonial days, when George Washington surveyed land in the vicinity and patented a farm nearby, in what was called "Washington's bottoms," the island was a noted beauty spot.

Essentially, Gordon says, it is the same today, and when cleared will be a noteworthy landmark of early American development. He plans to open the park to visitors.

To Hunt for Gold Table Aboard Sunken Galleon

La Plata, Mo.—Two Missourians are planning a trip in search of a 3,800-pound gold table which they believe was aboard a galleon reported to have been sunk in the Caribbean sea about four centuries ago.

Lester Dent, fiction writer, and Kenneth Sien will sail in Dent's 50-foot schooner, in which the owner made a similar trip several years ago.

The story on which they base their hope for recovery of $1,500,000 in gold is that the Spanish governor of Cuba, called back to Spain to answer charges of plotting against Christopher Columbus, took all the gold available and had it cast into a table, which he took on board his ship.

Dent believes the boat on which the governor sailed sunk in shallow water off a small coral island.

If the expedition fails, Dent plans to go to Honduras to search for Inca silver.

Taunts of Girls Cause 50 Murders in Kenya

Nairobi, Kenya Colony.—The taunts of native girls, who tell their admirers first to get blood on their spears before courting, has been responsible for 50 murders in the Samburu district in recent months, headmen told a British officer sent to investigate.

The only solution, headmen said, was to "marry them off young." But early marriage is forbidden by the age-grade law, called Ilkileko.

The officer left 15 policemen, to be supported by the headmen, until the murderers are produced. As the headmen's annual incomes average $15, swift justice is expected.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

John Golden, the proprietor, was in an anecdotal mood recently and told a story concerning the late Charles Frohman. Years ago, in London, Mr. Frohman stopped at the Savoy. The first morning after his arrival, he rang for a waiter and explained that he wanted his morning meal served always at eight o'clock and that it was to consist of half a grape fruit, two eggs boiled two and a half minutes, toast and coffee. He also informed the waiter that he didn't care for conversation early in the morning and wasn't interested either in the weather or politics. Each morning, the waiter arrived on the minute with the breakfast at just the right temperature, served it silently and departed silently. For two weeks, the same thing continued and so impressed with the service was Mr. Frohman that he continued to talk long after his return, of the one perfect waiter he had encountered in all his travels.

• • •

One morning—it was Mr. Frohman's birthday—there came a knock at his door and when he said, "Come in," much to his surprise in walked that same English waiter with the usual Frohman breakfast. The waiter served it silently and departed silently just as he had back in London. Not until later did Mr. Frohman learn that his fellow producer, Charles Dillingham, had arranged to transport the waiter from London to New York as a birthday present to Mr. Frohman. The waiter continued in Mr. Frohman's service until he died, some years later. Then he entered Mr. Dillingham's employ and was in charge of the house until after Mr. Dillingham married.

• • •

Mr. Golden told the story at luncheon in one of the larger hotels. Finding he had forgotten his glasses, in his usual spontaneous manner, he borrowed a pair belonging to the head waiter. Having adjusted them, he looked at the owner.

"There," he said, "is the perfect waiter Mr. Frohman found in London."

When the 100 or more policemen, who work under Deputy Inspector Joseph Bannon, moved out of the Arsenal station in Central park recently to another building in the park farther up town, they left behind a building older than the park itself. The arsenal was built by the state in 1848 as a depository for arms and ammunition. At that time it was in what was practically a wilderness. In 1856, the city purchased the arsenal and the land surrounding it and during the war between the states, it was used to house troops. Then it became a police station as well as headquarters of the park department. Now it is being used solely by the park department.

Maybe a press agent story is o. k. today. A bright young man had a wealthy client who never had done anything worth a single line of publicity. So the press agent undertook a lot of digging and finally assembled a bunch of good, harmless stories to which the name of his boss could be attached. Before he could place any, his employer became blond-involved and hit the tabloids with a bang. So the press agent not only lost his job but also has a file of stories ready for a new name.

Quintuplets Get Table Designed in Star Form

Tamaqua, Pa.—A table in the form of a star, designed and built by J. E. Dyer of Frackville, near here, has received recognition from Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, doctor for the Dionne quintuplets, in their behalf.

Doctor Dafoe expressed his appreciation of the unique table in a letter to Dyer.

Dyer built the table like a star so that each of the quintuplets would have her place apart from the others, and designated the places the girls were to occupy by inlaying a gold letter on each offset.

Start Class Struggle

Washington.—Business, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, again has clashed with the New Deal, and again the cannonading by business added nothing. Its attacks apparently bothered the New Deal not at all, for the New Deal has proceeded after the manner of the mastiff trotting along without concern while a poodle barked and snarled.

Business made no overtures for compromise with the New Deal and New Deal spokesmen were not hastening to make peace with business leaders. Altogether, there was not the slightest indication given that there will ever be peace between the two elements of economic thought.

The one thing that impressed me about the recent annual meeting here of the chamber of commerce was the solidarity of business in its opposition to general New Deal principles. That was to be expected but it has not always been the case. In days past, there were many business groups and individuals who adhered to the New Deal and vainly tried to work out an understanding with the administration. At this annual meeting, however, there was not the slightest effort made on the part of business to accomplish any arrangement whereby business and the administration would work together.

This can mean only one thing: President Roosevelt is going into his campaign for re-election without the support of business interests except where, in particular lines, benefit has accrued incidentally to specific businesses.

One would think that such a condition would constitute a threat against the President's re-election. Such appears not to be the case, however, because of the particular type of campaign which Mr. Roosevelt and his political commander in chief, Postmaster General Farley, are making. The President's recent political speeches have made it quite clear that he is seeking support wholly from the agricultural and labor segments of our voters. His appeals are quite open and frank and they are drawing considerable criticism because it is held they constitute the initiation of class struggle in this country. Whatever the reason for the President's course, it remains as a fact that he is very busy cultivating voters who have suffered most in the depression.

Makes Good Fight

When I reported above that business came off second best in its fresh assault on the New Deal, I did not mean to imply that it had not made a vigorous fight. It probably gained some ground in getting before the country its side of the story, a phase of our national situation which has not been as fully advertised to the country as have the activities and accomplishments of the New Deal. The story of the losses suffered by business actually is not a great deal different from that of the individual, and many businesses are existing on a hand-to-mouth basis just as is the case with thousands of individuals. Because business, in our mind's eye, at least, is larger than an individual, political demagogues regard it as fair game and for that reason, I am inclined to believe, business has not had a fair chance on the part of most of us when considering national problems.

On the other hand, business has many units within the whole that have not played fair. There are a great many corporations that are guilty of plain oppression, even to the extent of fraud and corruption of business methods. For the crookedness of this segment, all business has been blamed by the New Deal. This is not equity. The unhappy part of it all is that unless all business stands together, good, bad and in-between, it can get nowhere at all in defense of its legitimate rights.

There is, therefore, a wholly natural and yet quite unfair result emanating from this condition. New Deal planners, in their efforts to catch the crooks, have punished legitimate business far too much if one is to accept even partially the public statements and the private expressions of the business men who attended the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce. This ought not to be and I think that legitimate business has just ground for complaint on this score.

So, as the situation now stands, I believe it can be said in all fairness that neither side in this battle between the New Deal and business comes into court with entirely clean hands. Business has its cancerous sores. The New Deal has its nitwits and theorists who know nothing about practical economics. The result of this is plainly seen, and it becomes more and more apparent that Mr. Roosevelt cannot accomplish his objective of complete recovery until he directs some of his subordinates to put their feet on the ground. Indeed, there are some of the New Deal subordinates who ought to be tossed bodily into the street, just as there are some business men who ought to be thrown into jail.

Business Has Answer

The chamber of commerce meeting brought forth the information that business, as a whole, had kept hundreds of thousands of workers on its collective pay rolls during the depression when conditions did not justify their retention. The claim was advanced that business had expended something like twenty billions in wages paid from stored-up reserves. It was further asserted that business was alone responsible for such gains toward recovery as have been made.

New Deal spokesmen, from President Roosevelt on down, have consistently accused business of failure to take on workers and help solve the unemployment problem. At the same time, the banking structure of the country has been accused chiefly by the President of refusal to extend credit to business, and business as a whole has been classified by the President as greedy.

It seems safe to say that as regards these charges, business does have an answer, for throughout all history capital has refused to work unless there was a reasonable promise of return. Now, in addition to the lack of that promised return, business is and has been constantly confronted with uncertainties on the part of the New Deal. The present pending tax legislation is typical. The most dangerous provision of that legislation is that which will prevent business from building up reserves such as those upon which it has been drawing during the depression.

If the business claim is true that it has paid out twenty billions more than its operations justified for wages during the depression, it causes one to ponder over the future. One is inclined to ask what strength business will have to do even as much for the working classes during the next depression as it has done in this one.

* * *

Delicate Question

With reference to the New Deal policies toward business, a statement by the Rural Electrification administration has just come to my desk. It touches on that very delicate question of how far the government can enter into business in competition with private enterprise without destroying or driving out private initiative. The complaint on the part of private business that the government is continually wedging its way into private fields is well known but the REA statement puts something of a new slant on the view. In fact, it brings to the front one of the elements of government in business not generally recognized.

The REA statement consists of a letter from REA Administrator Morris Cooke to the State Corporation Commission of Virginia. The Virginia commission was urged to consider the situation in which the REA and one of its loans will be placed in event of a certain ruling by the Virginia officials. In effect, Administrator Cooke asked the Virginia commission to rule against private business in order that a $360,000 loan made by REA to a co-operative organization in Virginia can be protected.

To review the facts briefly, let me explain that a private electric company applied to the Virginia commission for authority to extend its lines for transmission of energy into a farming section adjacent to cities served by the electric company. It happened that the REA had sent agents into this same territory and had obtained promises from many farmers to buy electricity from a co-operative concern to be organized and financed by REA. The private company apparently horned in to what Mr. Cooke thought was the territory of REA by right of discovery or some other such reason, and so he is now engaged in attempting at least to prevent the private company from entering that field.

The point of this circumstance is that here is a federal agency, steeped in bureaucracy and with the usual bureaucratic thirst for power, which actually is attempting to drive private industry out of its way. It is doing it under the thinly disguised reason of protecting a government loan.

I have heard considerable discussion of this case. Many observers and students of economic questions contend that the federal government has absolutely no right to engage in that sort of business. While it may be, and probably can be, said that the electric company was attempting to take the cream of the crop by extending its lines only to territory adjacent to its headquarters, the fact remains that the normal re-employment which that private company would do will be cut down proportionately by the extension of the federal activities into that area. It may appear that the workers displaced for the private company will be taken on by the federally financed co-operative lines but such is not the case. It is just one more indication of how government, once it enters private business, continues to expand and to destroy initiative which private enterprise has and which government never has been known to have.

Testing Drunken Drivers.

FOR testing drunken drivers the Cleveland police have a device named the opthalmic televinocular stereoscope. But why not just ask the suspect to pronounce it and abide by the results?

Old times back home, we had our own system. We didn't follow the New York scheme of inviting the alleged inebriate to say "Sissie Fitzgerald," because he'd probably take refuge in his constitutional rights as a southern gentleman and refuse to bandy a lady's name in any such place as the calaboose.

Under our plan, if a citizen was lying in the street and his fingers didn't move, he was intoxicated. But if even his little finger moved, he merely was resting.

But we didn't have alcoholic automobiles to pester us.

Mankind's Real Humanity.

WHAT with this and that, just when a fellow is almost ready to decide that the human race should be charged off as practically a total loss, something happens.

This time it happened in a little mine in Nova Scotia where the calm heroism of two men, penned with the body of their dead comrade at the bottom of a caved-in shaft, was matched by the magnificent gallantry, the incredible endurance of volunteer rescuers, who, by day and night, unceasingly labored on in momentary peril of death for themselves to save the lives of that trapped pair—and did save them.

And a week or so before that it happened when a young girl dragged the only other survivors of an airplane crash out of the flaming wreckage and ministered to them and forgot her own hurts while she waded long miles down a snow-drifted mountain to give the alarm, and, having given it, staggered back again to do what else she might.

Bankers Versus Politics.

POLITICS certainly makes estranged bedfellows.

But a Presidential campaign or two behind us and across the scene with thunderous tread stalked the sacred white cows of big money, their udders dripping wisdom, their gentlest bellow harkened to with eager ears by candidates and delegates alike. Statecraft mingled with high finance was what they offered in a rich and creamy measure to one and all—the pontifical Mitchell, the omnipotent Dawes, the infallible Insull, the wondrous Wiggin (subsequently known as the uncovered Wiggin). And lo, the voice of Owen D. Young was heard in the land.

But now, alas, where are the Baruchs of yesteryear?

Meandering Horsemen.

A DARING soul, residing in a back corner of Brazil, decided to ride horseback to New York. After jogging along some weeks in what might be described as a series of general directions, he reached Rio Janeiro, only to discover he'd already traveled 1,200 miles out of his way.

The name is given as Senor Severino Moura Fonseca, but the gentleman certainly behaved as though he were a congressional investigating committee. Why, he even outwandered Senator Black of Alabama, and up until the other day, when the administration threw a net over him, the senator held the world's championship for loose wandering.

It's startling, isn't it, how suddenly the great silence descends upon a statesman who gets out of line with the top bosses?

End of cord from ordinary tire showing unprotected cotton fibers inside cord

The body of the New Firestone High Speed Tire is made from selected long-staple cotton dipped in liquid rubber, absorbing eight pounds of rubber in every hundred pounds of cotton. This patented Gum-Dipping process insulates every fiber in every cotton cord, preventing internal friction which creates the heat so destructive to tire life, and giving to the tire added strength.

This heavy, broad, traction and non-skid tread is held to the cord body of the tire with Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords, a patented construction, making the cord body and tread an inseparable unit.

NO SWERVE LEFT

A leading university in 2350 tire tests has found that the new, scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up to 25% quicker. Its super-traction and non-skid efficiency have also been proved in the famous Pike's Peak Race where for eight consecutive years it has been used on the winning cars.

TEXAS' $25,000,000 FAIR OPENS JUNE 6

City of Dallas Plans Real Southern Welcome for Throngs Who Will Visit Centennial Exposition This Summer.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

"WELCOME to Dallas!" The sign is going up in the city where the $25,000,000 World's Fair of the Southwest opens June 6. With every intention of according to the millions of sightseers expected at the Texas Centennial Exposition which will remain open until November 26, a real, old-fashioned southern welcome, Dallas is undoubtedly one of the busiest cities of the land today.

Her beautiful "salesladies," the Rangerettes, 50 of the fairest daughters of the Lone Star state, have for the last few months busied themselves with gadding about the country presenting various celebrities with 10-gallon hats and 24-carat kisses, and spreading the news that this is to be one of the most picturesque, historically fascinating and recreationally diverting fairs in the annals of expositions.

Now it's up to the home folks to make good the promises of their much photographed lady ambassadors and put on a show for the victims who have fallen prey to their charms.

Fair Speeds to Completion.

This the Texans are doing in a big way. Three shifts of men, working night and day, are putting the finishing touches on the buildings, exhibits, parks and amusement areas so that they will open complete and on time. Anyone who has doubts that this can be done need only be reminded of A Century of Progress, the World's fair which had a two-years' run in Chicago. The night before opening day, Chicago citizens, peering over the fences for a preview, went back to their homes heartsick in the conviction that the fair was still months from completion. They returned to the grounds in the morning, to find the scene completely changed and the job finished, so swiftly do the builders of modern expositions work.

Bill Pack, young rodeo star, and Lucy Ann Snell, Rangerette hostess, snapped on the facade of the $250,000 administration building of the Texas Centennial exposition which opens in Dallas June 6.

The opening of the Fair will be the culmination of preliminary celebrations held in various cities throughout the state, commemorating 100 years of Texan independence. This independence, gained by revolution against the government of Mexico in 1835-36, plus the richly dramatic events which followed, and with which anyone who has studied history in the public schools is generally familiar, forms the background for the exposition.

"The most beautiful girl I have ever seen" is the way Walter Winchell described Frances Nalle, Dallas red-head and queen of the Rangerettes who have been used to publicize the exposition.

It will not be the purpose of this account to review the historic events which the fair commemorates, for there are many books which do it far more thoroughly. Rather it will be an attempt to cover briefly what the visitor to Dallas this summer can expect to see.

The grounds, which embody chiefly the $4,000,000 plan of the Texas state fair, cover 200 acres. Over this vast area is rising a fairyland city of unusual buildings, characterized by massive pile, unbroken sweep of wall and gay, painted borders. Architecture is of the classic modern type, with a definite pueblo influence. City, state and federal governments, and exhibitors and concessionnaires are combining their efforts to make up the whole.

Lagoons Are Decorative.

At the main entrance is to be an esplanade, 300 feet wide and 1,000 feet long, leading to the Texas Hall of States. Centering the esplanade will be a huge reflecting basin with concealed lights shining through the water to illuminate the surrounding buildings. Flanking the basin are to be two permanent buildings, the halls of transportation and varied industries.

The beauty of water will be a delight frequently to meet the eye in this fair, for yet another lake will appear in the civic center, and a symphony shell will decorate its banks. A giant fountain will act as a centerpiece landmark for this lagoon.

Largest of all the exposition buildings is to be the $1,200,000 Texas Hall of State, a native white limestone structure with an elaborate court which was dedicated on San Jacinto day, April 27. Its historical wing will house hundreds of fascinating treasures of the revolution and the days of the republic which followed, its exhibits continuing chronologically through the entire period of statehood up to the present day. The Hall of Heroes will pay tribute to the men who founded Texas, while other sections of the building will be devoted to displays of the social and industrial life of the state.

Plan Diversified Exhibits.

Of the buildings constructed by the exposition itself, the most important are the halls of transportation and varied industries, which will house exhibits of the character indicated in their names, and the buildings of the farm center, five in all. In these latter structures will be conducted livestock, agricultural, poultry and food shows, and related exhibits.

Exhibits in the exposition will fall into several major groups, such as agriculture, livestock, science, arts, industry, education, history, domestic arts and home planning, electricity and communications, transportation, petroleum and mineral resources, natural history and aquatic life, etc.

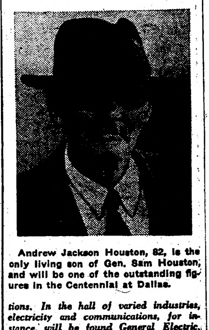
Hundreds of fine specimens of southwestern game and bird life will be mounted in habitat groups in the hall of natural history. The aquarium of the exposition, one of the largest in the United States, will be stocked with myriad varieties of salt and fresh water fish, in 66 different tanks and pools.

In another building, the great air-cooled exposition auditorium, which seats 4,600 persons, will be found almost continuous entertainment, including grand opera, musical comedy, celebrated orchestras, folk festivals and pageants. Each night a southwestern utility company will present some outstanding Broadway musical show or stage play. Another utility has built a hall of religion, in which all creeds will participate.

Flowers and Music.

For the nature lover, the hall of horticulture will be near approach to heaven. It will be surrounded by flower gardens where hundreds of varieties of roses, wild flowers and other floral gems will be growing. Strolling the gardens, the visitor will be able to hear the music from the symphony shell on the lagoon nearby, where outdoor programs will be given daily during the exposition.

Elaborate industrial exhibits are planned by some of the nation's largest corporations. In the hall of varied industries, electricity and communications, for instance, will be found General Electric, Westinghouse, the American Telephone and Telegraph company, du Pont and other manufacturers.



Andrew Jackson Houston, 82, is the only living son of Gen. Sam Houston, and will be one of the outstanding figures in the Centennial at Dallas.

In the hall of transportation and petroleum will be the displays of the great automobile and airplane manufacturers, as well as the oil companies. The petroleum show will be inspired by Texas' leadership in the production of oil.

Midway Takes Shape.

No matter if he misses many of the cultural and educational exhibits the average visitor never fails to find his way to the Midway of a world's fair. At Dallas the seeker after entertainment will find it plentiful. Already nearing completion are the German Black Forest village, the English village, the famous Old Globe theater of Sixteenth century London, and other gay spots which were outstanding hits of the World's fair in Chicago and will probably be repeated in many world's fairs to come.

The visitor's comfort will by no means be overlooked by the hospitable Texans. Already steps are being taken to shelter the world's fair wayfarer, especially the visitor from the cooler regions of the North, from the Texas sun. Six hundred large trees have been planted for their shade value as well as the natural beauty they will add to the scene. Also of decorative importance are the 50,000 shrubs which will be set out before opening day.

Leading among the show attractions is the "Cavalcade of Texas," a vast pageant which will be produced on a stage 350 feet across and 200 feet deep, and will dramatize the history of the Lone Star state, beginning with the landing of the conquistadores in 1519. Many of the 300 actors in the extravaganza will be descendants of the heroes and heroines whom they will impersonate.

Pageant Is Ambitious One.

Audiences at this giant spectacle will see on the stage artificial rivers with Spanish galleons and pirate ships floating upon them. Massed singing choruses will include cowboys, Franciscan friars, revolutionary and confederate soldiers, trail drivers and Texas rangers. Stage coaches, covered wagons, Spanish armor, frontier rifles, long horn cattle and buffalo will be among the colorful properties. It is said that the pageant will far outdo even the magnificent "Wings of a Century," pageant of transportation which played to more than 2,000,000 persons at the Chicago fair.

Unique among theatrical effects will be the "curtain" between scenes. This will be nothing more than a vast sheet of fine water spray, 100 feet high, with colored lights playing upon it to produce the mood of the scene to follow. So large is the stage, even great battle scenes will be enacted.

Dallas itself is being beautified in anticipation of a great influx of summer visitors. Fifty street cars and a number of buses are being added to the transportation systems to handle the crowds. Civic plans include the establishment of adequate housing facilities. Permanent guests are being asked to move out of the hotels, and managements are pledging definite numbers of rooms for exposition visitors. At Southern Methodist university dormitory rooms will be opened to summer guests, and at the Hockaday School for Girls dormitories will be held open part of the summer for guests. Hundreds of private homes have listed rooms which will be available to the traveler. The city's department of information is ready to offer what services it can.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

Those states having examination of drivers as a repuirement before licenses are issued show the best accident records. However, that is not enough. The revocation and suspension of driving licenses is what makes a safety record in any state.

As soon as drivers realize that they are apt to lose their licenses because of their participation in a careless accident, they become better drivers. To have their licenses revoked for repeated traffic violations will soon bring them in line.

This is as it should be.

Some states do not seem yet to have realized that they cannot extinguish the accident fire with cupsful of water - - they must use bucketsful.

Commencement Exercises

Commencement exercises at the local school will be held on Thursday evening May 28th at 8: P. M. The exercises will be held at the school auditorium.

A new type of commencement program will be inaugurated this year, by having the pupils contribute a greater part of the program. There will be short messages given by the pupils from the graduating class of the high school as well as by representatives from the eighth grade class. These topics will deal with subjects of general educational interest. As in previous years, the highest ranking student in each of the graduating classes will deliver the Salutatory and Valedictory. The students who have this honor this year are Vernice Tollefsrud in the eighth grade and Eleanor Peterson in the highschool department. They will deliver the addresses of welcome and farewell, respectively. Musical numbers will be rendered by the Girl's Glee Club. Presentation of diplomas will be by the President of the Board of Education.

This type of program will eliminate the Commencement address as the chief part of the exercises and substitute a number of shorter addresses by the graduates.

There are nine graduates from the eighth grade and seven from the high school department. The list are as follows:

8th Grade
Milton Hanson
Adrian Nelson
Vernice Tollefsrud
Lyla Kolden
Willis Fluke

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding.

On Wednesday—eighteen days after his advent at Southampton—the Duke got a letter from Mrs. Ridder.

"My Own Dear Boy: I write this as we are leaving Cherbourg, and shall try to post it at Southampton. How I wish it were our Southampton, and that I were about to see you. Your radio message arrived duly. I understood, of course, and it made me happier than I have been in years. Don't laugh, but I have slept with it under my pillow. Think how long it has been since I have had any word from you, save for that hurried, worried talk at the hotel.

I wanted to write you at once, but it has been hard to get a minute away from your father. He really is very ill, and a little irritable, and the doctor says any shock might prove serious. Of course, I want to tell him about you, but perhaps it's as well that I can't just yet. We shall be away until the end of July, at least, and perhaps longer. By that time, I shall have had such good news of you as will enable me to win him over. He does care for you, dear. As much as I do. Perhaps more, and that is why his pride has been hurt, and he has seemed so hard.

I do hope you have given up drinking. That has been your real enemy. And I do hope you will find work. Nothing else will go so far in persuading your father. And we must persuade him soon. He must change his will. It isn't the money I'm thinking of so much as its bitterness. I could bear your being 'cut off,' but I have begged him for years to take out the paragraph forbidding me to help you, and giving his reasons why. I shall never forget the night he read me that. He has taken care of the household expenses at Southampton. (Did I tell you that we were going to open the place, anyway? We've had Willetts ever since we've had the house, and our agreement is that his winter lay-off isn't to last over six months.) Your father gave him his check when he came to the hotel the morning we sailed, and will send him one every month, to pay servants, etc. I am enclosing another hundred dollars for you. Cash, because my bank account's rather low now. That's all, except that I am counting the days to your letter at Nauheim. It's perfectly safe to write me there, as I shall arrange with the porter. I want that letter, dear. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now. One false step on your part—one foolish exploit like that at college — if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word.

If I seem over-anxious, you will understand. You are almost all I have.

Mother.

P. S. Don't fail to write."

For the first time since he had inserted his knife blade under the dry putty of that window, the Duke felt ashamed of himself. Deeply and thoroughly ashamed.

"What can I do?" he said. "I can't write. And what would be the use? One letter, and then silence. Some day, she's sure to find out that her boy never came near Southampton. . . . I wish to God I could find that boy!"

Thursday's evening paper was full of Judge Hambidge.

"Hambidge Decision Due," the headline read, "As Civic Association Links Holding Corporation with Boss Kelly."

The link didn't seem very strong. Kelly, who evidently was some potatoes in Tammany hall, had once employed one of the "alleged dummy directors" of the corporation that owned the property to be used in widening Jefferson street. "In the face of this sensational disclosure," the paper asked editorially, "will Supreme Court Judge Hambidge have the courage to give these men the fabulous sums they ask for their rookeries? Judge Hambidge insists that he has never even met Mike Kelly. 'I have never spoken a word to him in my life.' Judge Hambidge's decision is long over-due. When it is handed down, the city's voters will know whether Boss Kelly has ever spoken to Judge Hambidge."

After that, Barry wasn't surprised to find the Judge absent from the next night's dinner party at his house. Evidently, the pack was in full cry. Friday's evening paper had a headline that ran clear across the street. Still unfolded, Barry had left the paper lying on the library table, with Boss Kelly's name filling most of its visible quarter-page.

Naturally, Patricia was disturbed. "Father spoke at a banquet last night at the Astor," she explained. "And he wouldn't let me stay in with him. 'I'll sleep in the hotel, and take a train out in the morning,' he said. An hour ago, he phoned that he'd been unavoidably detained."

"I fancy he didn't feel quite up to the trip," Peter Winslow added to Patricia's apology. "The speech must have taken it out of him, and then, afterward, he saw a woman killed by a taxi-cab."

"Oh—Peter!"

"Yes. The Judge called me, early this morning, about his decision in this condemnation proceeding. He'd just sent it to the county clerk's office. And his voice sounded rather shaky. He'd gone for a walk after the dinner was over, he said, and the taxi dashed out of a side street, just as the woman stepped off the curb. The driver jammed on his brakes, and skidded right up onto the sidewalk. The usual hit-and-run business."

"What did the Judge talk about at the dinner?" Barry asked, chiefly to change the subject.

"I don't know. I haven't seen a paper today."

Winslow seemed preoccupied, Barry thought, but a mighty fine fellow. A famous criminal lawyer, but so simple and kindly. He was a big chap, loosely put together, and his graying hair was loosely brushed back from a face that was square in every sense. The two men clicked at once. Barry loved Peter's manner to his wife—a soft, round, pink little woman, with worried eyes. Peter was always jollying her — gently, whimsically, protectively. "My yes-man," he said of her. "Anything I do is right."

"That's only my move to make the decision unanimous," smiled Mrs. Winslow. She had wit, in her own quiet way.

"I never met your father," the attorney remarked to Barry, in the drawing room, after dinner. "You work on his newspaper, I suppose."

"No."

"Don't you want to do anything?" he asked.

"Very much."

"What?"

"Anything."

"That won't get you far. Can you write?"

"Like the lady who was asked if she could play the piano, I don't know—I never tried."

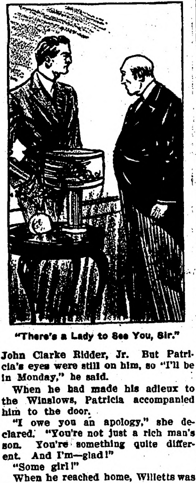
"You should be able to write—with your father's gift of trenchant expression. You've got it, too, in conversation. My brother owns a big advertising agency. I'd like to have you meet him."

"I'd like to," said the Duke. "I do want to work." He hesitated. "I've been in town almost every day this week, looking for a job."

He caught Patricia's surprised glance.

"Come in and see me," Winslow suggested.

Just his damned luck! Here was a job—a career, probably—for the asking, and he couldn't take it. Not as John Clarke Ridder, Jr. But Patricia's eyes were still on him, so "I'll be in Monday," he said.



"There's a Lady to See You, Sir."

When he had made his adieux to the Winslows, Patricia accompanied him to the door.

"I owe you an apology," she declared. "You're not just a rich man's son. You're something quite different. And I'm—glad!"

"Some girl!"

When he reached home, Willetts was waiting in the hall.

"There's a lady to see you, sir."

"At midnight?"

"She got here around eight o'clock. And she wouldn't go. She's upstairs, in the library."

"What kind of a lady?"

"Sort of glittery, if you ask me," the butler replied.

"Did she come in a car?"

"One of the station taxis, sir."

"How's she going to get back? Never mind! I can rouse Evans, if we need him.. You go to bed."

Very much on guard, he climbed the stairs to the upper rooms.

Willetts was right; her eyes were "glittery." And hard. A woman who knew her way around, Barry would have said. And yet there was something tender about her, too. She had a sharp face, with a slightly protuberant chin. Her lips and brows and lashes were heavily made-up, but her hair, nondescript in color, escaped in soft waves from beneath her cheap little red beret. She wore a shabby black dress, and her shoes were badly worn.

All this, Barry observed in the long moment before she spoke.

"You're not Mr. Ridder," she said. Her voice was hard, too. Like the girl, hard and yet pitiful. It seemed on the point of breaking.

"Yes," Barry answered. "I am."

"Not John Clarke Ridder. Not the old man."

The Duke breathed again.

"Not the old man, of course," he said. "My father's in Europe. I'm John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The girl stared at him.

"You mean you're John Clarke Ridder's son?"

"Of course."

She kept on staring.

"Somebody's crazy," she said.

It had come, then. It was bound to come. Was Willetts listening in the hall? What would Patricia say?

"Somebody's crazy," the girl repeated, "and I don't think it's me. Or somebody's a liar, and I don't think it's him!"

And, suddenly, she began to laugh.

"No," she shrilled; "it's you! It's written all over your face! And it's funny, because you've walked into a pretty mess."

"I—?"

"If you're John Clarke Ridder, Jr., I'm your wife."

"My wife?"

She stopped laughing, as suddenly as she had begun.

"That's it," she said, and her voice was harder than ever. "I'm your wife, and you're under arrest for killing a guy!"

"Under arrest?" Barry echoed. "What are you talking about?"

For answer, the girl reached across to the library table, and handed him the newspaper she had been reading when he came into the room.

"That's what John Clarke Ridder did—last night," she said. "Killed a guy. That guy. That damned skunk. Mike Kelly. Boss Kelly, of Tammany Hall!"

CHAPTER III

After all, she wasn't such a "glittery" lady.

For, as Barry glanced at the newspaper headlines unfolded before him, she crumpled suddenly, and dropped into the big chair.

"Steady!" the Duke admonished her. "Wait a minute; I'll get you a drink."

He poured the girl a stiff hooker of brandy, and she drank about a third of it. "Knew her way around," undoubtedly, he thought, and yet there was something helpless and appealing about her.

"Finish it."

"Thanks; I'm all right now."

To give her a chance to pull herself together, the Duke went back to those headlines. "Boss Kelly Murdered," they read. "Body Found by Servants. Skull Crushed. Midnight Caller Hunted by Police."

"Was your husband the midnight caller?" he asked.

The girl nodded, wearily.

"And he's John Clarke Ridder, Jr.?"

She nodded again.

For some reason he never quite understood, the Duke had stopped wondering whether Willetts was listening outside. Instead he was thinking of a letter that lay in the drawer of the library table; a letter from a heart-hungry old woman, who had written to this boy, from three thousand miles away, "I am counting the days to your letter. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now."

Well, something had happened. Something that would end that old woman's efforts to make it up with the boy's father; something that might well be the end of them both.

"Why did your husband kill Boss Kelly?"

"He didn't."

"You said—"

"I said, 'That's what John Clarke Ridder did.' Well, that's what they say he did, and it isn't going to make much difference whether he did it or not."

"But you don't think he did it."

"I know he didn't. He had reason enough, and he's done a lot of crazy things, but Jack wouldn't hurt a fly."

"Why did you come out here?"

"For help."

"Well," the Duke said, "maybe I can help you. God knows, I'd like to. Anyway, let's see where we stand."

He crossed the room, and sat opposite her, on a little library chair.

"Go on," he urged. "What's your name?"

"What's yours? Your real name?"

"Barry Gilbert. I'm a bum. I took shelter in this house, one rainy night a couple of weeks ago, and everybody thought I was young Ridder, so I let 'em think so. That's my story. What's yours?"

She actually smiled.

"You've got your nerve," she observed. "Well, that's what we need now. My name's Peggy O'Day."

"Actorine?"

"Sort of. I was a chorus girl in 'Blossom Time' when I met Jack in Florida. He was a bum, too. Living under a fake name. We still live under that. Jay Rogers. Everybody calls him 'Jack.' The old man paid him fifty dollars a week for not using his name. We've got a little boy, now, and he doesn't even know his name's Ridder. He thinks he's Jay Rogers, Jr. The old man doesn't know what name we took, and he doesn't care."

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Minneapolis—The central city market opened for the season with approximately 150 truck farmers leasing space from which to sell their produce.

Excelsior—Radisson Inn on Christmas Lake near here, one of the better known resorts in Minnesota, was swept by flames and burned to the ground with a loss of $100,000.

Minneapolis—Three men, a grocer, a former relief department clerk, and a cafe operator, confessed members of a ring through which fraudulent relief food orders were sold, were sentenced to one year each in the workhouse.

St. Paul—Liquor drinking in Minnesota is increasing, the April report of David R. Arundel, state liquor control commissioner, disclosed. Revenue from liquor taxes in April, 1936, the revenue increased to $143,450.

Fairmont—Mal Eiken, a reserve back on the University of Minnesota's undefeated championship football teams of the past three seasons, has been named head football coach and instructor in physical education at the high school here.

Faribault—Two new ordinances providing for the licensing of electricians and pinball machines were passed by the city council. Electricians must pay a license fee of $25 for the first year and $10 each additional year, licenses to be approved by the city council.

St. Paul—Minnesota is all set for a construction job that may reach as high as $100,000,000 this year, Fred Schilplin, state FHA director, announced. This volume of business should be sufficient to employ every carpenter painter and building mechanic during the construction period, according to Mr. Schilplin.

St. Paul—Alvin Karpis, long wanted Public Enemy No. 1, was captured without a fight at New Orleans, La., by federal G-Men, led by J. Edgar Hoover. He was immediately transferred to a chartered plane and flown to St. Paul, where he is under indictment in both the William Hamm and Edward G. Bremer kidnapings.

Aitkin—Aitkin county officials were asked to pay old age assistance with funds transferred from treasury balances totaling $202,333 as is permitted by the new old age assistance law, Director Kenneth C. Haycraft of the state agency said on his reurn from Washington. The law permits such transfers excepting from ditch and sinking funds.

Ada—Shot twice while he slept, John Kinniger, well-to-do bachelor farmer, was found dead in his home four miles west of Ada. Robbery, in the opinion of Deputy Sheriff Oscar Bang, was the motive for the slaying. He said preliminary investigation revealed Kinniger sold quantity of wool and a shipment of sheep in Fargo the day before he was found dead.

Wolverton—En route to their home here in Wilkin county, two truck drivers, Morris Tyler and Barney Substad, were waylaid by a gang of eight men a short distance out of Minneapolis, in Anoka county, who hi-jacked their truck-load of liquor valued at $4,446 and then took them on a roundabout tour before releasing them, five miles west of Stillwater.

St. Paul—Fifteen fourth-class postoffices in Minnesota will be advanced to the presidential grades July 1, next, the postoffice department announced, because of increased volume of their business. They are: Cohasset, Dunnell, Easton, Elysian, Green Isle, Holt, Kettle River, Lake Lillian, Newport, Peterson, Prior Lake, Rose Creek, Saint Hallaire, Trail and Wendell.

Duluth—Persons living on Minnesota farms increased 3.7 per cent from April 1, 1930, to Jan. 1, 1935, according to a special report made public by the bureau of the census, department of commerce. As of Jan. 1, 1935, the Minnesota farm population was 928,478, of which 2,000 were non-white races. A large part of the gain in the farm population was in the northeastern part of the state.

Fairmont—With property damage placed at $500,000 and with four dead and more than 25 injured, the Red Cross and other relief agencies began relief efforts in the tornado-stricken areas in Todd and Martin counties. A survey shows 300 buildings were demolished or badly damaged on 200 farms. WPA workers are in the area to help remove debris and clear drainage ditches damaged by the twister.

Minneapolis—Farmers and land owners planting forest trees on crop land will be paid up to $15 an acre this year under terms of the soil conservation program, Frank J. Brown, University Farm, in charge of the state program, announced. One, amounting to $10 an acre, will be paid for shifting from soil depleting to soil conserving crops. A secondary, or soil building payment of $5 an acre, will be made to those planting forest trees on crop or pasture land.

Minneapolis—This year's college graduates find from 20 to 100% more jobs available than did the class of 1935, with starting salaries $5 to $25 a month higher in many lines. The heavy industries show the most striking revival in employment opportunities, with more "scouts" visiting campuses to interview promising seniors than at any time in the past several years, according to a survey of the employment situation at 61 leading universities and technical schools, made by Northwestern National Life Insurance Company

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.—The more I ponder on Italy's sacrifices in Ethiopia, as balanced against what she gains, the more I'm reminded of the old story of the Confederate who was released from a northern prison camp after the surrender. Skeleton-thin from jail fever and debility, he started on tottery legs for the Ohio river, determined to die on southern soil. One night this poor rack-o'-bones crept into a haymow. Next morning, early, the hired man heard suspicious sounds in the loft and ran for reinforcements. Presently, the ex-captive's refuge was surrounded by stalwart, armed men. The farmer's six-foot son leveled a cocked musket.

Irvin S. Cobb

"Come out of thar, whoever you be," he bellowed. "Consarn your hide, we got you."

The southerner raised a white face. "Yas," he said, wanly, "and one h—l of a git you got."

His Next Movie.

WE'RE starting a new picture, and I am teamed up with Slim Summerville, 6 feet 6 of pure comedy, and little Jane Withers—for her age, the greatest scene-stealer in the business. It's as though Little Boy Blue were sandwiched in between Jesse James and Calamity Jane. Well, as I go down for the third time I'll still be gurgling feebly, so give me credit, please, as an earnest gurgler.

They call our picture "Public Nuisance Number 1," but a movie is like an Indian—starts out with a name and winds up with anyone of a half-dozen. I once knew a Blackfoot who was first one thing, then another, and the best he could do for himself in his old age was to be known as Chief Many Tail Feathers Going Over the Hill.

Pranks of Zioncheck.

THE papers seemed so barren—not a single front page story about Representative Zioncheck, Washington's No. 1 Boy Scout. Life, indeed, is empty on a day whose low descending sun sees no gay deed done, no headline won by the nation's official problem child.

He may have started off at the foot of the ladder, alphabetically speaking, but his startled constituents can't complain that the gallant lad stayed there. Either he's getting pinched or getting jailed or getting married or getting his pen in hand to tell the President how to run the country, or getting ready to polish off some fellow-statesman of the house, or just getting about.

And hasn't he put the throbbing pulse into the Congressional Record? It reads now sometimes as the old Police Gazette used to.

Rules for Olympics.

AS I understand it—and somebody correct me, please, if I'm wrong—the rules for the forthcoming Olympic Games in Berlin have been so revised that it will be quite all right for any of our Jewish athletes to take part—just so they don't win.

I'm wondering, though, about what may happen when the American team turns up over there with a whole batch of negro foot-racers in the outfit. It's going to be awfully hard to convince a Prussian crowd that they're merely medium-to-well-done Nordic-Caucasian stock browned in the pan, so to speak.

It so happens that our fastest runners are all colored boys. Perhaps 'tis just as well. They may have to keep right on running.

Improvement in Influenza.

IN RESPONSE to large numbers who wrote or wired, I would state that either I'm getting over my influenza, or maybe I'm just getting used to it. Its latest whimsical notion was to settle in both ears, and now should it thunder, a rare occurrence out here, in order for me to get the benefit of the phenomenon, it'll have to thunder again—and louder. However, being temporarily deaf has its advantages: I don't hear the dull things other people say, but can still enjoy the bright things I say myself.

As will be noted, I'm back from Palm Springs, where I cooked in the desert sunshine until all I needed to do before being served was to drape a sprig of watercress across my brow and thicken the gravy with a little brown flour. Driving in, I kept tying up the traffic; so many motorists mistook my face for a stop signal.

Should I relapse I'm going to try to throw myself into the epizootic. That's a horse disease, but I've been as sick as a horse and had to be as strong as a horse to live through it—and, anyhow, I know a good horse doctor.

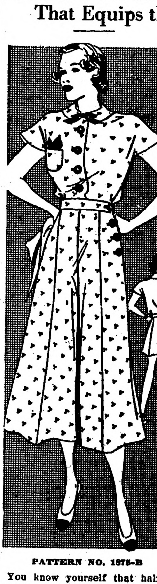
Ouch

"You say yours is the perfect husband?" exclaimed the first woman.

"Yes," retorted the other, "but my definition of a husband is 'a man who takes his wife for granted, thinks having meals on time one of the most important things in the world, wonders why she complains about picking up after him and can't be made to understand it actually takes money for a woman to keep looking presentable."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Divided Skirt and Shorts Combination That Equips the Young Lady for Sports



PATTERN NO. 1875-B

You know yourself that half the enjoyment of any sport is spoiled if you aren't correctly dressed, and really there's no excuse for not being equipped for any active sport when a model such as illustrated is so easy and inexpensive to make.

The divided skirt is suitable for golf, tennis, bicycling, riding and hiking. It assures plenty of room and comfort, buttons on the side and supports the most youthful blouse. Note the sports pocket, Peter Pan collar, raglan sleeve and dainty feminine bow.

Instead of the divided skirt, you may have shorts if you prefer, for the pattern is perforated at just the proper length. Notice the small sketch.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1875-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4¼ yards of 35 inch fabric. For shorts only, 3¼ yards is required. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

Are You Using 2c Electricity

Our electric system is designed to carry the maximum annual load which occurs during the winter months. This load drops off sharply in the spring due to changing seasons with the result that we have considerable excess capacity in plants and lines in the period from March to June. Therefore, during these four months we are passing on to our customers the use of this excess capacity by selling all electricity over and above last year's bill, plus 5%, at 2c per K.W.H.

Many of our customers have taken advantage of this exceptional offer and are now enjoying the use of 2c electricity. A considerable number have purchased Electric Ranges or Refrigerators and applied the savings to their purchases. Others have used electricity freely at this exceptionally low rate to lighten the labors of the home. It will pay you to investigate this offer.

Safetygrams
BY
FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

I feel it again necessary to appeal to the press for action and publicity against drunken drivers.

A newspaper in America is a powerful influence in spreading and creating public opinion. Once public opinion is aroused against drunken drivers it becomes dangerous for these drivers to occupy our highways.

In spite of all the carefulness and precaution and courtesy used by other drivers, a drunken driver who does not have clear eyesight and good judgement, is a menace to others and himself.

The laws of the state should be enforced. Drunken drivers should have their licenses revoked and should be barred from driving for a certain period. If a second offense is prosecuted, a jail sentence without the payment of a payment of a fine should be the answer.

We cannot demand too much severity to protect people who ure at the mercy of these criminals.

County-Wide Cow Test

On Monday, May 25th the State Livestock and Sanitary Board and the Buteau of Animal Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture started a Tuberculin test of all cattle in Marshall county, the testing to be completed within a two weeks period.

Twenty-nine veterinarians and their assistants reported for work on Sunday and met with the field veterinarian and county agent to receive their instructions and territory in which they were to test.

The present period of accreditation for the County runs out on June 1, 1936 and the state law and the unifform rules and regulations prevailing throughout the United States for the official accreditation of a county as free from tuberculosis under the area of a plan of contcol requires that a test for reaccreditation be made at this time. All animals in a herd two weeks or over be tested. Indemities will be paid for all animals which react as provided for under the state law.

The test is made as provided by the law and in accordance with the agreement of the Board of County Commissioners of Marshall County with the State Livestock Sanitary Board and the Bureau of Animal Industry. This test is made without cost to the individual cattle owners or direct expense to the taxpayers in the county.

Owners of cattle will be notified in advance as to the day and hour his cattle are to be tested and farmers are asked to cooperatr by having all animals in the stables at the time designated. This request is made so that there will be no delay in testing and so that other herds can be tested which are scheduled for the same day.

Marshall County has been divided into 29 districts. Edgar Horien is assisting the veterinarian from southern Minnesota with the testing around Holt.

Growing Opium Poppies

The successful cultivation of opium poppies is possible only where there is not an excessive rainfall and where the climate is tropical or subtropical. Also, the industry can be successfully carried on only where labor and land are sufficiently cheap and abundant. The cultivation of poppies for the production of opium is therefore not possible in this country and it would undoubtedly not be allowed even if it were feasible.

Will Wage War On Hoppers

Grasshoppers will run into trouble in Minnesota almost as soon as they are hatched this year, and indications are the state will be almost completely free of the pests before they are big enough to do any damage, experts at the University of Minnesota predicted.

Both North and South Dakota face another season of the grasshopper plague, however, although early signs point to a less serious menace than in recent years. The insects are also numerous in Montana and some Iowa sections, surveys have shown.

In Minnesota grasshoppers have been reported only from small sections of Kittson and St. Louis counties in the northern part of the state, according to A. G. Ruggles, professor of entomology at University farm, and plans have already been made to poison them before they can attack growing crops.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss.

Everything about the girl was a contradiction, the Duke thought. Hard, and yet soft, with her steely eyes, and her quivering lips. Her English was rather better than fairly good, and yet she could say, "He's a tough guy—that bird!" Beaded eye-lashes, and "a little boy." A chorus girl who believed in her husband, and came an hundred miles through the night to help him. A philosopher, the Duke, as we have seen, and he found himself musing, "Is anyone black or white? Aren't we all contradictions—kind of a dirty gray?"

"Go on," he said.

"Well, Jack was getting this fifty from the old man's lawyer—when I met him. We were playing West Palm Beach, and he followed me to Miami. Hadn't anything else to do. He was drinking all the time, and I knew he'd never quit until he had to. 'I'll marry you,' I told him, 'but not while you're loafing around on money you get from a guy that's ashamed of you. I want a home,' I said, 'and a husband I can respect. You get a job, and I'll marry you.'"

"Did he?"

"Yes, he did, and I married him. That week. It was a good job, too—night clerk in a big hotel at Palm Beach. After that, we let the fifty lay in the post office. Jack didn't want to, at first, but I said, 'We're going to make Jay Rogers mean something, and then we're going back and talk turkey to the old man.' We had a swell little home, and the kid came, and he's swell, too. And then, all at once, the boom busted right in our face, and the hotel closed, and we beat it back to New York. Say, what am I telling you this for?"

"Go on."

"Well, the next chapter's the same old story. No money. No job. Tramping the streets, looking for work. Know what that's like?"

"I invented it," said the Duke.

"Well, then, you know. Things kept happening. The boy got sick, and the people we rented the room from threatened to put us out, and I guess Jack couldn't stand it. So he went to see his mother—without telling me. He didn't tell her about me, either.

"The old lady gave him a hundred bucks, and invited him down here. I don't know what else happened, because I was so mad he didn't dare tell me. Proud? Well, partly, but I guess the truth is I was scared they'd separate us. Anyway, I made him send the money back. 'What're we going to do?' he said. 'Let the kid starve? I can't get work.' 'No,' I answered, 'but maybe I can. I'm a good hoofer, if I do say it myself, and there's worse-looking girls in a lot of shows.

"Well, there wasn't an Aborn show in town. Or any other regular show that wanted me. So last Monday I landed in a joint, called The Cocoanut Bar. One of those places where you get a ten-course dinner and a revue for two dollars, and both of 'em rotten. Salad without dressing, and you don't care because the show girls are the same way. Tough spot—The Cocoanut Bar—but I wasn't choosey last Monday."

"So, then, Jack was mad."

"Plenty. He'd been promised a place as elevator man in Brooklyn, but we couldn't wait for that. You can be as straight in a cabaret as you can in a convent, if you want to do. Oh, well—last night, Mike Kelly came in. About eight o'clock. With two strong-arm guys. I knew him right away, because he was five weeks at the hotel where Jack worked in Palm Beach. And he sat down, and sent for the boss—Luis Morano, the boss, is—and they had a stiff pow-wow. Morano was sore all through when he came back where the dressing rooms are. And then we swung into a number, called 'Tickle Me.' The girls go up to the men, in that number, and paw 'em a good deal. And, in the middle of this pawing, Kelly jumps up, and yells that I've tried to pick his pocket. I'd really just got to him, as another girl left, but he grabbed my arm, and shouted so you could have heard him in Harlem. Luis ran over, and the bouncer brought a cop, and a crowd gathered.

"Kelly'd been drinking a lot. 'You can't get away with that!' he kept yelling at Morano. 'I'll send this girl to the island, and you to the hot-spot! You watch me!'

"'I got nothing to do with it,' Luis answered. 'I don't even know this girl. She only came Monday. Isn't that right, boys?'

"Well, the end of it was that I walked out with the cop. I'd've been in the lock-up yet, only there was a decent young fellow on the desk at the station house. He let me go on my promise to return if I was wanted, there being no one there to sign the complaint."

While she talked, the Duke was thinking.

Astonishing things had happened, and went on happening. Were astonishing things always happening, everywhere? And did they come about as quietly as this; as much as though they were the commonplaces of daily routine?

"You've walked into a pretty mess," the girl had said. But, after all it wasn't his mess. So far as he was concerned, the game was up.

He had made full and complete confession to this girl, without a moment's hesitation. Firstly, because the game was up, anyway, and, secondly, because it had seemed the right moment for laying cards on the table. He had asked to see her hand, and he couldn't expect to do that without showing his own. Without inspiring her confidence.

Why did he want to inspire her confidence? What was her story to him? Why should he care what happened to a woman he had never seen—in Bad Nauheim? But, damn it, he had seen her! He had seen into her mind and heart, which is a good deal more than looking at a face, or a black satin dress. Her life would be over with this. And the old man's. "The doctor says any shock might prove serious. One false step on your part, if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word."

The Duke felt sorry for these young people, too—for that foolish young husband who "wouldn't hurt a fly," and for this painted, hard-soft young wife and mother, who had wanted a home and a man she could respect.

Patricia? Well, that hurt. He had known it would. He had known, from that first day, that he cared a lot for this girl who needed a spanking, but he had known, too, that his caring wasn't going to come to anything. Even if his luck had held, you couldn't marry a girl like that, and then have her find out that you were "a bum." An imposter. It didn't matter now. What mattered now was whether this boy had killed Mike Kelly. And, if he hadn't, whether it was "going to make much difference"—with all the Boss' cohorts arrayed against him. And, anyway, how the whole business was to be kept—for a while, at least—from the woman who was "counting the days" to his letter at Nauheim.

"You've got your nerve," Peggy O'Day had said. "Well, that's what we need now." And, as he listened, Barry was more and more compelled to agree with her.

"We got home around half past ten o'clock," the girl had been saying, "and Jack was wild when he saw the cop, and heard the story. 'I'll be back for you tomorrow,' the cop said, 'and you'd better be here. This department takes its orders from Mike Kelly, and don't you forget that.'

"'I'm going to see Mike Kelly,' Jack says. 'I knew him pretty well in Palm Beach. And I know where he lives. I'll be back here by midnight.'

"He was—just as the clock was striking. I remember that, because I thought of a line from a burlesque of an old play I was in once. 'The hour has struck, and I am here.' Jack was all-a-tremble. 'The son of a sea-cook!' he says. 'The dirty skunk! I'll get that guy some day!'

"'Wouldn't he see you?' I asked.

"'Sure, he saw me,' Jack said. 'The butler brought me right in—a Jap, or a Filipino, or something. Kelly'd been drinking, and he was drinking more—in the dining room. He came in to me, in the drawing-room, though, and shut the doors behind him. The Jap—or the Filipino, came in after, with a bottle of Scotch whiskey, and two glasses, and Mike kept on drinking. I had one with him. He was pleasant enough to start with. The telephone rang in the hall, and he apologized for going out to answer it. When he came back, '"You'll have to make it snappy,"' he says. '"I've got an important conference here in a few minutes."'

"'So then I told him about you, and he went nutty.

"'"She's a damned little thief!" he yelled.

"'"She's my wife," I answered.

"'"Your wife!" he said, "Yes, and I guess anybody's wife that wants her!"

"'"Don't say that," I asked him.

"'"I'll say anything I damn please!" he shouted. "Who the hell are you telling me what to say? A guy living off a girl at Spanish Luis Morano's! Well, I don't give a damn who you live off, but when Luis sics 'em on to lifting stuff out o' my pocket, they got the wrong bird! This dame's going to jail tomorrow, and I'm going to headquarters myself to be sure she does go! Now, get out!" he says.'

"Well, of course, Jack loses his temper. They yelled at each other a few minutes, and then Jack says he calmed down. '"Listen,"' he says, as quietly as I'm talking now. '"I don't amount to much, and I guess I know it as well as you do. But you let up on my wife, or I'll never let up on you as long as I live—so help me!"'

"And, with that, he flounces out of the house.

"'Did you bang the door?' I asked, trying to make him laugh.

"'I banged both of 'em,' he answered. 'The door from the drawing room into the hall, and the front door. I mean what I said, too. If you're arrested tomorrow—'"

She paused for a moment, and slumped back into her chair, as though completely exhausted.

"You'll find the rest in the paper," she concluded. "The cops picked him up about three o'clock this afternoon. He thought they'd come for me, first, and he said a few things about Kelly that aren't going to help much. I don't know yet why they didn't pick me up, too. Anyway, when they'd gone, I did a whole lot of thinking. And I decided this wasn't a good minute for pride, or anything. 'If they're going to separate us,' I said, 'why, they're going to, and that's that.' So I took a chance, and the first train I could get after I'd found somebody to look after the boy. When the butler told me Mr. Ridder'd be home around midnight, I figured my luck had changed. Of course, I never thought of a fake Ridder."

There was no ill-will in her tone; only a faint amusement, succeeded, almost immediately, by desperate earnestness.

"Well, that's my story," she said. "God only knows why I told you. I came out here to tell it, because I didn't think even that tough old bird would want to see his boy sent up for murder. Now—what do we do? Cable? I haven't got money enough; have you? I haven't got a lawyer, or a dollar to hire one. I haven't got a relative that I know about, or a friend in the world. Just a sick kid at home, and a fellow I'm kind of strong for locked up in the Tombs."

She had asked, "What do we do?" "I haven't got money enough; have you?" Taken him into partnership; that's what she had. Into one of those natural, inevitable partnerships of people who have no one to whom they have the right to turn; the kinship of the poor, and despised, and outcast.

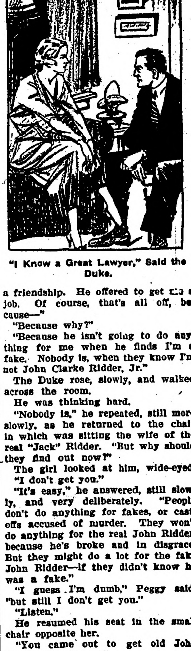
"I know a great lawyer," said the Duke. "A great criminal lawyer. I met him tonight. A fellow named Winslow."

"Not Peter Winslow?"

The Duke nodded.

"Yes, he's great enough, but he'd never take my case."

"He might take mine," the Duke mused, aloud. "We struck up quite a friendship. He offered to get me a job. Of course, that's all off, because—"



"I Know a Great Lawyer," Said the Duke.

"Because why?"

"Because he isn't going to do anything for me when he finds I'm a fake. Nobody is, when they know I'm not John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The Duke rose, slowly, and walked across the room.

He was thinking hard.

"Nobody is," he repeated, still more slowly, as he returned to the chair in which was sitting the wife of the real "Jack" Ridder. "But why should they find out now?"

The girl looked at him, wide-eyed.

"I don't get you."

"It's easy," he answered, still slowly, and very deliberately. "People don't do anything for fakes, or cast-offs accused of murder. They won't do anything for the real John Ridder, because he's broke and in disgrace. But they might do a lot for the fake John Ridder—if they didn't know he was a fake."

"I guess I'm dumb," Peggy said, "but still I don't get you."

"Listen."

He resumed his seat in the small chair opposite her.

"You came out to get old John Clarke to help you."

"Yes."

"And he wasn't here."

"No."

Hachicko's Long Vigil at the Place of the Rendezvous

IN THE harbor at Yokohama, midst the hustle and bustle of debarkation, I first caught the phrase, "Meet me at the monument."

Ashore, at the customs, where travelers babble principally in English, a tourist remarked to a friend, "I will watch for you at the statue." Which statue? Here again, ambiguity.

An hour later in Tokyo, I received a third hint when an American silk merchant, revisiting Japan, agreed to meet an acquaintance the next day at "Hachiko's pedestal."

The following afternoon, having arranged an appointment to meet up with a friend at Shibuya station, a suburb of Tokyo, I was told to show myself at the "dog monument." By this time, fed up with the mystery, I agreed to come, provided he would inform me concerning the widespread popularity of that particular point for the contacting of friends and countrymen.

"When you get there," said he, "I'll explain all. You'll be interested. Don't fail."

Memorial to Faithful Dog.

Detraining, I passed through the station toward a short flight of steps that led to the street, where I came rather suddenly upon the statue of a curly-haired dog seated on his haunches and mounted on a pedestal of stone, the whole construction approximately seven feet in height, and highly ornamental in the Japanese style. Standing around were a number of people apparently waiting for others to turn up. Among them was the friend who had dated me up at the "dog monument."

He approached with all the manners of a first-class tourist guide. "As you don't read Japanese," he said, "it is my pleasure to translate the legend on the pedestal. In some particulars this is the most interesting piece of sculpture in the kingdom, symbolizing as it does the virtues of Patience and Fidelity, without resorting to mythology. This dog, who in life answered to the name of Hachiko, was the friend and companion of Professor Uyeno, department of agriculture, Imperial university, Tokyo. Both have since died, immortalized in a sense because of the story that survives them."

With Hachiko for escort, it was the professor's daily habit to leave his home in the morning and to walk the few blocks between his residence and the Shibuya station where, with a short speech and a pat on the head, he dismissed his dog, boarded the train and went about his professional duties at the university. Hachiko, knowing what was expected of him, ambled back to his kennel alone, there to await the 5 p. m. train, when he would again turn up at the station and greet his master at the foot of the short staircase down which the professor always came with the regularity of clockwork.

Death Takes the Professor.

One afternoon, about eight years ago, in conformity with his week-day custom, Hachiko trotted up to the listening post and squatted upon his haunches. The 5 p. m. train rolled in and discharged its passengers. The usual hurry and scurry common among returning suburbanites ensued, each homecomer receiving swift inspection from the eye of Hachiko, seeking only for the familiar figure with which he had appointment. In singles and pairs and groups, the hurrying throng flowed along the platforms and down into the street.

But, for some unknown reason, the beloved Uyeno was not that afternoon among them.

The professor had died that afternoon at his post in the university. No messenger brought the ill news to his waiting friend, who for eight long, anxious, but perhaps—who knows—hopeful years, Hachiko of the hungry heart, took up his place to be on hand against the day when the 5 p. m. train brought the missing comrade home from somewhere out there in the distant unknown.

Vigil of Hopeless Memory.

Rain or shine, the dumb beast, spurning all human sympathy, kept this vigil, never wavering in the belief that the absentee would reappear. The efforts of a kindly man, believing that he could win the dog away from the hopeless memory by giving him a new home, came to naught, for, each day at the appointed hour, Hachiko turned up at the Shibuya station, taking his place at the foot of the empty stairs, there to watch until nightfall, when he went home, thinking only of the familiar figure that had vanished from view. All of Tokyo knew the truth, that never penetrated to the consciousness of the one who suffered most.

A little more than a year ago this shaggy akita dog, faithful to the last, broken spirited, sad eyed and mystified, passed out of this life. The story of Hachiko's steadfast affection, brought sharply to the public mind by his death, swept Japan like a warm zephyr, arousing a sentiment that expressed itself in the erection, through public subscription comprising all classes, including the school children, of a statue unveiled with public ceremonies appropriate to the occasion.

Memorial Day

Cy Warman in the Indianapolis News.

Gather the garlands rare today,
Snow-white roses and roses red;
Gather the fairest flowers of May,
Heap them up on the graves of clay,
Gladden the graves of the noble dead.

Pile them high as the soldiers were
Piled on the field where they fought and fell;
They will rejoice in their new place there
Today, as they walk where the fragrant air
Is sweet with the scent of asphodel.

Many a time, I've heard it said,
They fell so thick where the battles were,
Their hot blood rippled, and, running red,
Ran out like a rill from the drifted dead
Staining the heath and the daisies there.

This day the friends of the soldiers keep,
And they will keep it through all the years,
To the silent city where soldiers sleep
Will come with flowers, to watch and weep
And water the garlands with their tears.

Day of Memories

FEW now survive from among those for whom Memorial day was particularly established. The ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are shattered. Younger men, veterans of later wars, take the place of those who wore the blue or gray from Bull Run to Appomattox, as symbols of the nation's strength in arms.

Forms of observance change with the times, but the underlying spirit of thankful remembrance remains ever fresh and unalterable. To those who first thought of setting apart a day each year for patriotic remembrance such an event as that now staged annually at Indianapolis or the baseball double header or the highways crowded with pleasure-seeking motorists would have been as inconceivable as the radio to an aborigine. But one likes to believe that these manifestations of American life do not in the least modify the nation's sense of devotion to the memory of those who have borne her arms to victory.

There is needed in these diverting and troublous days some special occasion when minds shall turn to the men who have dared to bare their breasts to an enemy in war, who have seen in their country's flag something more than a piece of bunting and been convinced that a nation worth founding was worth defending even at the expense of life and treasure. One hears much in these days of pacifism, of oaths solemnly taken never to bear arms in war, of the supposed mockery of popular government, the rise of dictatorships and the smashing of treaty pledges. One hears too little of the innumerable thousands of stanch American hearts which still believe in national honor, the Constitution and the causes for which men in the past have been proud to die.

A people ready to observe Memorial day is not one to give way to despair. Today we honor the patriot dead. We honor, no less, the living who are inspired by the example of those whose graves they decorate.

Where Our Troops Stopped

A RUGGED monument of war implements, mortar and stone, marking the extreme point of advance of the American army during the World war, still stands on a hill east of Buzancy, France, years after it was constructed by American soldiers on Armistice day, 1918.

The monument not only marks the farthest advance of the American army on the western front during the World war—it also marks the ground where at least four major wars of history have ended.

The monument is composed of German war weapons, including helmets, rifles, bayonets, swords, barbed-wire, gray pieces of uniform, and two small field guns. Encrusted in mortar, the enemy's arms of war were permanently "bound," symbolizing American victory.

This spot has always known strife. In 1870 Moltke's Prussians crossed the Meuse near here and humbled the French under Napoleon III on this ground. That battle ended the Franco-Prussian war.

Battle cries echoed in the hills of Buzancy little more than a half century earlier when Napoleon was terrorizing central Europe. Only a short distance away is Waterloo.

Richelieu, dictator of France in 1641, was crushed on this noted battlefield by a combination of French and Spanish forces, and the Swedes journeyed to this battle ground at an earlier date, ending a bloody conflict with the Franks.

The Unknown Soldier

UNDER the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, where an eternal flame is kept burning, is the grave of the Unknown Soldier of France. Surrounded by a grille and a roped enclosure in the floor above, Great Britain's Unknown Soldier lies at rest, under the nave of Westminster Abbey. Italy's Unknown Soldier is buried beneath the altar of Victor Emmanuel monument in Rome.

Washington Digest

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—The Department of Agriculture and its stepchild, the Agricultural Adjustment administration, have launched the initial phase of the new soil conservation program. This, it will be remembered, is the agricultural benefit policy worked out to supersede the unconstitutional AAA, and the speed with which the department has developed the early phases of its new program is noteworthy. It has not wasted any time, nor could it waste time, in order to make the new program effective in this crop year.

Speed New Soil Program

While the work of policy making has gone on at an unusual speed for governmental procedure, I am afraid it cannot be said that the soundness of its program can be commended in the same manner.

Some of the soil building practices proposed under the new scheme of aid to the farmer undoubtedly will work out but there are others about which there is much doubt. Indeed, already it has been pointed out that certain of the practices proposed are vulnerable and are likely to lead to serious trouble both for agriculture and for the government.

More than a score of the states were included in the first set of rules and regulations governing soil building practices and rates of payment. The others are nearing completion and will be promulgated at an early date. But the first block of rules and regulations and rates of payment establish the general outline of the department's ideas and it can be said, I think, that in these rules and regulations (the government must lay down general provisions) lies the trouble. They are replete with that which we usually describe as red tape and red tape never has failed to cause trouble.

Practices for which farmers may receive payments vary from state to state. They include the new seeding of legumes and grasses, the plowing under of green manure crops, the planting of forest trees, the eradication of perennial noxious weeds and, in certain areas, a variety of special soil handling methods such as listing, strip cropping and fallowing, terracing or approved summer fallow. In addition, farmers in certain dry land areas have the option of substituting some of the practices for acreage of soil conserving crops.

In announcing the new practices and rates of payment, the Agricultural Adjustment administration declared that the policies follow in general the recommendations made to the Adjustment administration by the several state committees. It was declared that the sentiment throughout has been "to adapt the general plan to the specific needs of the states in conformity with the approved methods which have been tested by the land grant colleges, the experiment stations and soil conservation service." The Adjustment administration considered that these three agencies furnished the best basis, or the best foundation, for the construction of the generally new program. It follows, therefore, that a considerable part of the new setup comes by way of expansion of the old soil conservation service which has had much experience in that work. It cannot be said, however, that the new phases have been tested nor is it more than conjecture how the farmers themselves will take to the plans now offered.

* * *

Just as the soil conserving practices vary, so do the rates of payment as between the several states. It is the claim of the Adjustment administration that variation in rates "is due largely to variations in the cost of seed, in rates of seeding or to differences in the requirements with respect to soil building practices." Rates of payment for soil conservation on irrigated land are higher than for those on dry land and likewise long standing agricultural practices have been taken into account in calculating the rates to be paid in various sections to offset the greater or less expense to which farmers normally are put in producing their crops.

Payment Rates Vary

Generally in the dry land states, the seeding and growing of perennial legumes, such as alfalfa, will net the farmer about $2.00 per acre but in irrigated districts the rate of payment varies from $3.00 to $4.00 per acre.

For most states, the rate for biennial legumes is $1.50 on non-irrigated land and from $2.50 to $3.00 an acre on irrigated land. Rates of payment for growing sweet clover are somewhat less as are the rates of payment for growing annual legumes.

The rates for plowing under green manure crops are from $1.00 to $2.50 an acre, depending upon the amount of growth which is turned under. For planting forest trees on crop land, farmers are scheduled to be paid $5.00 an acre.

For weed eradication the program proposes to pay $5.00 an acre where only periodical cultivation is required but it will reward the farmer for taking out weeds by chemical treatment in addition to periodical cultivation by paying him $10.00 an acre. In addition to these methods of soil conservation, strip cropping and fallowing command about $1.00 an acre of benefit to the farmer while terracing will be paid for around the basis of $2.00 or $3.00 an acre.

Other states, as they are brought under the soil conservation program, may expect rates similar to these for the first half of the country. It is obvious, however, that in the more thickly populated areas where agriculture is carried on in a more concentrated way, new and different practices must be prescribed. It is certain, also, that these practices must be made to take into account the varying types of crops where farming is done on smaller acreage per farm or in the fruit and truck garden areas.

* * *

From this program, two sets of conclusions have been drawn. One school of thought maintains that the regulations are simple and easy of enforcement; the other group argues that it is utterly impossible to apply rules and regulations, administered from a central bureau in Washington, to the whole country and yet enable flexibility of management sufficient to meet the countless problems that will arise.

Opinions Differ

One conclusion is that by administration of the rules and regulations through state and county organizations and with the aid of state experiment stations, individual farmers can be advised and can work out their individual problems with ease. The other school of thought contends that this very fact means a perfect maze of different applications of the rules and regulations both as to language and intent; this group likewise maintains that favoritism will permeate the whole structure and that there will be injustice, ill will and politics in the way the local organizations deal with the farmers.

While the policy makers in the marble palace known as the Department of Agriculture contend that the soil conservation program will spell the end of surpluses and will accomplish better prices for what the farmers produce, another argument stresses the claim that the new program means dislocation of agricultural output and the market to which that output normally goes.

To go back a year or more, it can be recalled how the original AAA upset the apple cart for one after another of the farm crops. When land was withdrawn from cotton, it went to tobacco production and there was too much tobacco. There had to be tobacco control. When land was withdrawn from tobacco production, it went to peanuts and there had to be peanut control. And so it was with various other crops until there was a perfect network of crop control each, basically, working at something like a cross purpose with other things.

* * *

As the new soil conservation plans unfold, those who doubt their efficacy point to numerous new dislocations that are comparable to those of the old AAA which I have just enumerated. For example, it is claimed, and there seems to be justice in the claim, the placing of a premium on growth of hay crops such as alfalfa, alsike and clover, can mean only an overabundance of those crops. I do not say that it is certain to occur but if conditions repeat themselves, the prices for hay crops in the market are due to fall. The law of supply and demand still governs regardless of theory and regardless of the attempts of bureaucrats to plan which the farmer shall or shall not grow. If world consumption falls low, crops of hay will be valuable. The chances, however, seem to be wholly in the other direction.

Find New Dislocations

Time alone can tell how this thing will work out but I cannot believe any sound-thinking person or any person who analyzes the program through to its ultimate end can say that it is free from weaknesses. The tragedy of the thing is that government is experimenting on the farmers. With that I am not in accord and never can be. Further, while I dislike to disparage honest efforts, I am afraid the new soil conservation program embodies some politics as well as efforts to help agriculture.

If it were a purely critical report of the soil conservation policies that I am making to you, I would be inclined to add to the above analysis the assertion that these plans embody too much organization. I have observed government administration from close at hand through a number of years. There is one conviction that I have gained. That conviction is that every time a new policy is proposed that requires the scattering of government-paid administrators, executives, field agents, inspectors and countless other nomadic individuals, clothed with official authority, throughout the country, just then does the policy fail of its purpose. Many hands may make light work but many heads, partly politicians, make a mess.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Yesterday's Literary Lights.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—The other day Finley Peter Dunne passed away. Thirty years ago his articles meant each week a roar of joy as wide as the continent. His books sold enormously; his country properly acclaimed him its greatest satiric humorist. Yet I'll venture not one in five of the on-coming generation ever heard his name, and we thought the fame of "Mr. Dooley" was eternal.

Mary Johnston, who wrote some of the most distinguished novels of her time, also died recently. In the papers I saw she rated only a brief paragraph.

Slower than Americans to give their love to man or woman, the English remain in sentiment wedded to the idol from then on. The marriage between popularity and merit lasts till death doth them part. But, we, who elevate a favorite to a pedestal overnight, forget that favorite overnight. We made an ardent sweetheart, an impetuous bride, but a most inconstant spouse.

"Simplified" Revenue Bills.

CONGRESS is wrestling with the new "simplified" revenue bill, having simplified it down to a mere sixty-odd thousand words—about the length of a fair-size summer novel. But the plot is different—and having made its provisions so clear and lucid that you may read it backward or forward, you seem to get practically the same result either way. So could anything be fairer than that?

It may yet be necessary to call in Professor Einstein to elucidate it. If he can explain his theory of relativity—and the professor still asserts he can—he might be willing to tackle the job.

Anyhow, the ultimate outcome—and in this connection I certainly like that word "outcome"—must be that congress will find a method further to lighten the pocketbooks of one and all. In other words, "we've got what it takes."

Where the League's Headed.

IN SPITE of what's happened lately, one persistent last-ditcher and forlorn-hoper among the British diplomats insists the League of Nations, to quote his own words, is "a going concern."

Yes, but where?

Makes me think of a little yarn a man told me:

"Fifteen of us," he said, "were waiting our turns to buy tickets one hot night at Grand Central station. All at once a gentleman, far over-taken in alcohol, forced his way to the head of the line, using his head to butt with and his elbows to paddle with, and emptied his pockets of some small change, and slapped it down on the shelf and yelled: 'Gimme a ticket to Buffalo!'

"'This all the money you got?' demanded the man behind the wicket.

"'Yes.'

"'Why, you can't go to Buffalo for a dollar and forty cents.'

"'Well, where can I go, then?' said the stew.

"And with one voice all fifteen of us told him."

G-Man Hoover's Efficiency.

YOU can't help liking the fellow's style of repartee.

"And what's a person named Hoover doing to justify his hanging on with this administration?" or words to that general effect, says Senator McKeller, of old Tennessee, brightly. "'Scuse me, massa," murmurs J. Edgar, reaching for his hat and handcuffs. "Ah won't be gone long, boss." And inside of a week or two he drifts in, strumming a plantation tune on his G-string and, by gum, if he isn't towing a whole mess of public enemies.

That's what I call an apt retort or, as the purists would put it, a snappy comeback.

Yellow Public Enemies.

WHAT is it has turned them from cop-killing bravos into quivering wretches who cower in hiding like mice behind a wainscot, who flinch like trapped rabbits when they're smoked out, who whine like whipped cur-dogs for a chance to plead guilty?

Can it be because, instead of courageous but inexperienced local officers, they now face trained man-hunters who'd rather destroy such human vermin than eat pie? Or is it because, instead of going to trial in state courts where unscrupulous shysters may trick dazed jurors into showing mistaken mercy and where, even though convicted, there's nothing ahead worse than temporary detention in some criminal-coddling retreat with sentimental meddlers to pamper them and mush-minded parole boards waiting to free them, now they get a full measure of stern justice from federal judges and go to real prisons, to stay there—hurrah!—till they're good and dead?

ROBOT EXPLORERS ARE SENT UP INTO THE STRATOSPHERE

The secrets of the sky are being discovered by balloons. These robot explorers climb ten miles into the stratosphere from Kew observatory, where they are launched by Professor Paneth. On reaching the ten-mile limit they burst, and the vacuum flask, carried by each, opens automatically, collects a sample of air, reseals itself and floats home by parachute. Self-registering instruments record the temperature and the maximum height reached.

Their main object is to discover what happens to helium, the rare gas which is set free when radio-active materials break down into commoner elements such as lead, a process that takes thousands of years.

The balloons also explore thunder clouds in order to find out how the source of atmospheric electricity is replenished. Little pilot balloons calculate the height of clouds. Their rising speed is constant, and the number of seconds they take to disappear shows the height of the lowest cloud layer. Twenty-two miles is the soaring record of an unmanned balloon.—Tit-Bits.

A Square Deal

FAIR play and the square deal are modern watch-words. We all like the sound of them, and we are glad they have come to be common in the nation's vocabulary and the nation's thought. Now the next thing is to translate them into the little everyday acts of private individuals. They are just as good for our relations with our employees as for our relations with nations; they are no more necessary for the dealings with great trusts than for dealings with little distrusts by which we fail to give our neighbor his rightful dues.

Moon Madness

ONLY one jump from the sublime to the ridiculous—

Madia Thorne sat on the cement edge of the lily pool and trailed her fingers disconsolately in the water. Madia was forty, her plump curves proclaimed it, her fallen arches attested the fact vociferously.

But the soft dusky shadows were kind. An inquisitive goldfish swam near investigating the ripples her fingers made, but Madia didn't notice. Her eyes were glued to the lighted windows of the mansion through the trees. A masquerade dance was in full swing. The music wailed a low sweet cadence—a whispering sadness—there had been a time when Madia was young, but nine children and Jim Thorne—romance had all but perished in Madia's heart.

Madia and her husband, Jim Thorne, were caretakers at Emberly Lodge and tonight youth and beauty would hold high carnival; behind the silken masks chivalry would bloom again and gay Knights would woo their ladies fair—and tomorrow Madia would gather the dance programs so full—return a stray compact or two when she did the cleaning.

The low whine of a plaintive violin, the throbbing, poignant notes of a cello brought an ache, a trembling urge to be one of the gay throng; just for one mad night to dance in silver slippers and cobwebby hose and listen again to thrilling passionate words of love.

Madia's lips twisted in a bitter smile at the incongruity and her glance strayed to her thick ankles and her clean starched apron.

With a sigh of patient resignation she started to rise. Duty called. Perhaps she had lingered too long now. They would be needing her to serve the refreshments. But wait! One of the guests was approaching. A tall man in the guise of a laborer or tramp, if you please. A picturesque vagabond in worn trousers and flapping shirt sleeves, swinging jauntily along the graveled walk. He wore no mask, had perhaps put it aside for this moment of expected privacy, alone by the lily pool.

Madia moved as if to leave, but the stranger spoke: "Don't go! Stay and talk to me. I'm so lonely and this night wasn't made for loneliness." Then in a voice as subtly bewitching as the mellow strains, "It was made for love and loving."

With a courtly gesture, "Oh, fair lady, are you moon nymph or creature of my own imagination?" Without more ado he flung himself on the grass at Madia's feet, almost touching the hem of her voluminous skirts. His hair, whether real or artificial, was a mass of matted dark curls. Madia could have put out her hand and touched their fascinating tangle. Propped on an elbow, he nonchalantly lighted a cigarette and by its feeble glow Madia could have sworn the stubble on his cleft chin was real.

A tramp personified. Would that she were so artistically impersonated! A moon nymph! Creature of glamour and mystic moonbeams, slim as a fairy lance. Madia moved a trifle more in the shadow. Why shatter the illusion? Madia tipped the scales at two hundred and twenty-five.

But the stranger waited not for her answer; he continued more to himself than to her. At first he humbly begged the privilege of kissing the hem of her frilly apron, then growing bolder he covered her hands with the fiery famished kisses of a man half-starved for love. On bended knees he struck the attitude of a knightly Romeo—he was court jester—he was king. He was a man begging for understanding—for love.

And Madia, bewitched by his audacity, met the quaint daring with thrusts akin. She was maiden slim and coy—she was siren bold—she was woman pouring out her heart for romance.

When he took her in his arms she yielded and the scratch of his bearded lips sent shivers along her spine. Yet shame and humiliation overcame her. What had she done? Jim and the children! She tore herself from his arms and hurried away. Yet the stolen moment had been so sweet just for that mad thrill—to have some one understand, to know all the poignant longing of a woman's heart.

"Ah, but you will come again every night here by the fountain when the crescent moon rides high and the shadows lie heavy and deep. Say you will, my sweet," he pleaded. And Madia knew that she would. Together they would sail enchanted seas and go gypsy voyaging to castles in Spain.

Back in her little kitchen Madia had the fantastic sensation of a lovely dream, but her bright eyes and burning cheeks were only too real. Romance was not dead! Once again she had a lover, an adorable prince who loved her.

Madia busied herself 'til her husband came in.

"Well, how goes the party?" she asked casually.

"Oh, all right, I guess," lighting his pipe with weary indifference. "But one of the guests gave us the very dickens of a time. He was dressed like a tramp and we couldn't understand the ruction until the authorities showed up. They were hunting an escaped lunatic from the asylum. Funny fellow! He kept insisting that he had been making love to a moon nymph down by the lily pool!"

Honest Admiration

"You are very deferential toward a traffic policeman."

"I try to show proper respect for superior wisdom," said Mr. Chuggins. "He is one of the few men who knows all the driving regulations as fast as they happen."

"Does your wife lecture you?"

"Me?" exclaimed Mr. Meekton. "Why, Henrietta wouldn't waste her time lecturing a little bit of an audience like me."

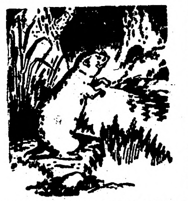
BILLY MINK OUTWITS THE TRAPPER

As smart and clever as you are,
A mink may smarter be by far.

THIS is what Billy Mink said to himself as he uncovered the trap which had been set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the bank of the Laughing Brook. Of course he was thinking of the trapper when he said it. At first Billy flew into a great rage. It made him angry clear to the tip of his tail just to think he must now be always watching for traps where for so long there had been no danger.

At first, on discovering that trap, he had thought to go on at once up the Laughing Brook and see what more he could discover. But you remember that Billy was hungry and that there was a piece of perfectly delicious fish back in that hole. He knew now just how that fish happened to be there. He knew that that trapper had put that piece of fish in there hoping that Billy would be so eager to get in that he would be careless.



"It Will Serve That Trapper Right if I Can Get That Fish," Muttered Billy.

The more he smelled it, the more he wanted it. "It will serve that trapper right if I can get that fish!" muttered Billy. "Perhaps it will teach him that he is not so smart as he thinks he is. I wonder if I can step over that trap."

Billy sat down and studied the trap and the entrance to the hole. The more he studied the more sure he became that he would be running a very foolish risk if he tried to step over that trap just to get a piece of fish. You see, that trap had been very cunningly placed. But the more he smelled that fish the more he wanted it.

Billy stroked his whiskers thoughtfully. Of course that didn't have anything to do with it, but just the same while he was stroking them he remembered something. His eyes snapped and he grinned. Way up on the bank between the roots of a certain tree was a little hole. It was the entrance to a little underground tunnel, and that tunnel led right down to the very hole in front of which the trap was set. It really was a sort of back door.

Billy turned and in a flash had scrambled up the bank. With his keen little nose he made sure that there was no scent of the trapper up there. He felt sure that the trapper had not found that little hole between the roots of that certain tree. But though he was sure of this, he took no chances. As he approached that hole he took the greatest care to make sure that no trap was in there.

There was none. Once inside the hole, Billy ran along that little tunnel chuckling to himself. He knew that there was no danger. He could get that fish. He did get it. He got it and ate it right there. Then he turned and ran out the way he had entered. Somehow that fish had tasted the best of any fish he had ever eaten. It was because he had outwitted the trapper.

X-RAY VISION

TO DEMONSTRATE his ability at X-ray vision, the magician takes a pack of cards from its case. He lays them on the table and asks some one to insert a card from the pack. The card must be put in face down.

Picking up the case, the magician holds it to his forehead and promptly names the value of the card. He may repeat the trick if he desires.

Be careful, in performing this trick, to specify that the card must be put in the case while the latter is on the table. Why? Because you have previously cut a small hole in the lower corner of the card case.

When you pick up the card case, you can see the index corner of the card within. That is why you are able to name it.

MARKETING FOR THE HOME

IT IS a heartening sight to visit the city markets and see the handsome, high-powered cars lined up at the curb and the lady of the house walking from stall to stall choosing the food for her family, along with the housewife of the poor man who must count every penny.

One of the hardest things for the average woman to do is to regulate her purchases to the amount she has to spend for food. It takes real self-denial to pass by the attractive delicacies for the table and confine one's self to the urgent neds. Shopping and marketing are fine things to develop self-control.

In too many households the marketing problem is left to haphazard buying or the last minute order, and so it is either a feast or a famine to which the family look forward.

The tender cuts of meat do not contain any more nourishment and they lack the extractives which are found in the more active muscles and so they lack the flavor. Cheaper cuts which are used for meat are often thrown away because of the idea that they have lost their food value. The fact is all the food value is still there, the lack is in the flavor or extractives, which may be supplied in various ways—adding flavorful vegetables, meat sauces and condiments, thus making palatable and nourishing dishes from meat left from broths.

When we learn that marketing is a household science which needs study and observation and that extravagant buying, however full the purse, is never to be indulged, we are in a fair way to improve in that part of household management.

We are told by those who have made a study of family needs that before a pound of meat is bought a quart of milk should supply the daily need of every child in the family. Milk may be used as a drink, as a main dish, in puddings, sauces, with cereals for breakfast and supper.

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

A GOOD SOURCE TO EXCUSE A BAD ACT

A WOMAN in Port Monmouth, N. J., quoted God and the Bible as the justification for keeping her two boys out of school.

Defying the truant officer, she claimed to have kept her boys at home because some of the subjects taught in the public schools are evil. With the aid of a book published in 1868 she herself taught them the three r's, which filled her requirements for her children.

One of the sinful subjects taught in the schools is drawing, this woman says. To prove it, she quotes from the Bible: "Thou shall not make unto thyself any graven image."

And because "the pages of history are splattered with blood and God forbids taking human life," history also is an evil subject and the teaching of it justifies her in keeping her boys out of school.

One's mental comment, of course, is that the woman is not in her right mind. But hers is not the first instance where something good has been misconstrued to excuse a bad act, a literal meaning held up to screen a breach of the true spirit of things.

If one tried hard enough statements could doubtless be found in the Bible to excuse other crimes; that is, the words could be twisted so as to seem to excuse them. But nobody would be deceived. Nor is anyone ever deceived when people try to twist each other's words so that they may seem to mean something that they do not mean.

THE ARISTOCRACY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THESE are the aristocracy:
The man who makes my shoes for me,
My clothes, the roof above my head,
The very comfort of my bed,
The food my body nourisheth—
Yes, even for my very breath
Upon some other I depend,
My noblest neighbor, nearest friend.

I never see a hand of grime,
A brow of summer sweat, but I'm
A bit ashamed no look of toil
Have mine, of contact with the soil.
My little greatness is less great,
A thousand times, than his estate
Who makes a habitable earth
For many men of lesser worth.

I am entitled to my ease,
My lighter task, by serving these
Who serve mankind, for then we all
Are workers, be we great or small.
I thus become, the best I can,
The equal of this other man
To whom I look, who looks to me—
Both then the aristocracy.

FINGERPRINT ALL SEEKING U. S. JOBS

Civil Service Commission Is Making Close Check.

Washington.—Fingerprints of more than 10,000 persons seeking government employment have been forwarded to the federal bureau of investigation by federal and local authorities to determine if they had previous criminal records.

A check through federal files revealed that 107 of 4,908 fingerprint cards received from the United States civil service commission were of applicants who had served penitentiary terms and sought government jobs under assumed names.

In one case, an applicant's fingerprints were received from the civil service commission when he was seeking an appointment as a postal clerk in 1929. These prints were later identified as those of an individual who was arrested in St. Louis in 1935 on a charge of violating the postal laws.

Convicted for Robbery.

In another case, federal agents received fingerprint impressions of a person entering the California state prison on November 30, 1935, sentenced to serve five years to life for robbery. The impressions were identical to those of a person applying for the Post Office department in 1929.

The police department of Pasadena, Calif., submitted the fingerprint card of a person seeking a pistol permit. A check of the files of the identification division of the bureau revealed that he had been arrested in 1926 on a charge of larceny, later arrested and charged with desertion in St. Paul, Minn., for which he received a suspended sentence of five years.

When his fingerprints were received from Pasadena, he was wanted at St. Paul as a parole violator. Federal officials notified the St. Paul authorities.

Check on New Employees.

Fingerprint cards of 646 applicants, seeking positions as hotel clerks, waitresses, caddies and others, were forwarded to the bureau from Miami.

A search through the files showed 53 of this number had previous criminal records for such offenses as violation of the prohibition and narcotic acts, desertion from the armed forces, defrauding hotelkeepers, receiving stolen goods, larceny, assault and highway robbery.

The fingerprint card of one applicant, seeking a position as checker, was found to be identical with an individual who had served a sentence at the United States industrial reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, for motor theft.

A guest of a Miami Beach hotel was robbed of $140 in cash, and immediately notified authorities. Suspicion pointed to an employee who had left the hotel that day.

He had been fingerprinted and photographed when he applied for the position. Police exhibited his photograph and fingerprints at railroad stations, bus lines and other points of departure. He was apprehended the same day.

Papaya Seen as Rival of Breakfast Grapefruit

San Francisco.—Grapefruit eventually may be replaced as the favorite American breakfast fruit dish by the Hawaiian papaya, or tree melon, if experiments now being conducted on the islands for the protection of the latter prove successful.

Up to the present the greatest enemy of the papaya has been the fruit fly. Now the United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with Hawaiian authorities, is conducting an intensive campaign along three fronts to preserve the delicious fruit for exportation.

The experiments include the introduction of parasitic insects to fight the fly; treating the fruit to destroy fly larvae before they can do damage, and processing of fruit for shipment in other than the fresh state.

The papaya is the favorite breakfast fruit dish of the island, and growers are confident that if it can be preserved for exportation it will become exceedingly popular in the United States.

Hero of Arctic Rescue Seeks Flyer's License

Seattle, Wash.—William L. Lavery, twenty-two-year-old Alaska airplane mechanic who aided in rescuing 102 Russians marooned on an arctic ice floe in the Bering sea two years ago, is training here for a pilot's license.

Lavery was decorated with the red-and-gold Order of Lenin medal and was awarded $2,500 in cash and 30 gold rubles, or about $27 a month, for life.

He was born in Fairbanks and has participated in several other Alaska rescues. His ambition is to become a transport pilot and return to Alaska for service.

Tippler Asks Court for 30 Days—and Gets 90

Pawtucket, R. I.—Michael J. Hurley, forty, with a hopeful countenance, pleaded guilty to a charge of over-tippling and asked for 30 days in jail, adding he thought he would "have my health back then."

"I think 90 days will do you a lot better," said Clerk Treanor of the Tenth District court.

"Thirty will be plenty," said Hurley, a bit alarmed.

"Ninety days," repeated Clerk Treanor.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Mike Rones, at the age of twenty, knows what it means to be a man without a country. He can't get a steady job because he can't supply any satisfactory background. He can't get on the relief rolls because he can't show that he is a citizen. He can't be deported because there is no proof that he is a national of any country. So he exists by doing what odd jobs he can find as he drifts from city to city. When things become too involved and hunger too acute, he turns himself over to the police in the hope that they will find some solution for his problems and with the knowledge that they will feed him. He has done that twice. In both instances he was fed. Once he was taken to Ellis Island and thought he was really going somewhere. But the immigration officers didn't know where to send him so they returned him to New York. Recently he surrendered again and was brought into court on a charge of vagrancy. The magistrate suspended sentence with a promise to attempt to find a job for him.

• • •

It was at the court hearing that the young man's story became known. He might have been born in Warsaw or Shanghai, he said. Or he might have been born in the United States. His mother never would tell him and naturally, he had no memory of that particular event. He saw his mother last a year ago in Texas. He doesn't know where she is now since they never correspond. His sister once lived in Juarez, Mexico, and he thinks she is now living in Cuba. He doesn't know what became of his father but he does remember traveling with his parents in Japan, China, Poland, Russia, Siberia, Africa, South America, Mexico and the United States. Now he'd like to settle down somewhere and rest after all his wanderings.

• • •

Rones came into the United States after a visit with his sister in Juarez. He said he merely walked across the bridge at El Paso. An immigration officer asked him if he was a citizen and he replied, "Sure." That was all the formality of his entry into the country where he is a man without a country.

• • •

In this matter of fact, machine age, there is still some sentiment. That was demonstrated recently at Pelham, one of the commuting towns where many who labor in New York by day sleep by night and putter in their gardens over the week-end. For almost 40 years, a trolley car has banged between the New Haven station and Travers island. The line is two miles in length but so full of bumps, passengers travel just about as much up-and-down as they do here-and-there. For some time, the trolley company has been seeking to substitute shiny new busses for the old car. Recently an election was held on the matter and the busses lost out by a vote of about five to one.

• • •

While there was the matter of fare involved—the trolley ride costs a nickel and the proposed charge for the busses was a dime—sentiment can really be held to have been the victor. In the first place, there are Louis Mattes, the skipper of the car, and his relief man, Eddie Glaser, who have been with the line years and years. They know every patron and are always ready to do a favor, even to leaving a call for someone who isn't on hand for his regular trip. Naturally Louis and Eddie have their friends and they turned out to vote. Oh yes, something else. The old car was Fontaine Fox's inspiration for his "The Toonerville trolley that meets all the trains." And that had something to do with it, too. So instead of putting on busses, the company will spend about $20,000 leveling some of the bumps.

• • •

Bus top eavesdropping. "She said she'd call him a skeptic only she never saw him with a scepter whatever that might be."

• • •

A gentleman came in with an attractive proposition to make three or four hairs grow where only one grows now. There was a guarantee attached to it and everything. There were also before—and—after photographs which showed deserts gradually going into hair production and ending with a good crop. Unfortunately, however, the salesman leaned over while placing those photos on the desk and thus exposed a plain-top pate. So he had to ring up no sale.

Barber for 72 Years Bars Women From Shop

Melrose, Mass.—"No Women Allowed" reads a sign in eighty-four-year-old William T. Kirmes' barber shop.

Kirmes, a barber for 72 years and claimant to the title of the oldest active barber in point of service in Massachusetts, bars women from his shop because "they are only 25 and 50-cent customers." "Each one brings a crowd, monopolizing the shop and driving away better trade."

ITALY REALIZES DREAM OF EMPIRE

But From Where Will the Capital Come to Develop Ethiopia's Unexploited Resources? And Will Italians Colonize Country?

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WITH the annexation of Ethiopia by Italy, the Dark Continent of Africa now consists entirely of "colonies" of the European nations, with the single exception of Liberia, a tiny negro republic on the Atlantic coast near the equator and just south of the Sahara desert.

Africa covers 12,000,000 square miles and is the home of 150,000,000 people. For four hundred years the continent has been a colonial pie sliced up by the swords of half a dozen nations. Much of the territorial holdings in it are in the hands of three minor nations which are hardly in a position to defend their holdings against the countries which in the past few decades have asserted their power more substantially.

These three powers are Spain, Portugal and Belgium. They rule over 1,850,000 square miles of Africa and among their colonial subjects are 17,500,000 people.

With her new colony, which Mussolini says will be developed to its fullest extent immediately, Italy now has possession of Libya, a vast stretch of country directly across the Mediterranean in a southerly direction from the mother country; Eritrea, along the southern end of the Red sea; Ethiopia, which includes the headwaters of the Nile, and Italian Somaliland, which lies along the Indian ocean and borders Ethiopia on the south.

Flanks Britain's "Life-Line."

This means that Italy has become an empire, that Victor Emanuel is no longer merely a king, but an emperor. The only barrier that separates the two major sections of this vast colonial estate is the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Italy is now firmly entrenched along both sides of the Mediterranean and at the southern mouth of the Red sea, becoming what is probably the dominating factor along the life-line of Britain's empire.

Italian Planes in an Air Raid Near Addis Ababa.

Britain, with her prestige falling apart because of the total ineffectuality of her campaign in the League of Nations to stop the Italian course of empire, and the utter failure of her fleet to bluff Il Duce into backing down, now finds herself in a most embarrassing position.

Not only has she suffered great loss of respect in the eyes of the world, but she has ceased to dominate the route to India through the Suez canal. Her line of colonies which stretch from Cairo to the Cape of Good Hope are no longer flanked by a nation without sufficient power to worry anybody, but by the colonies of a nation which is not only powerful in Africa but in Europe itself. And the source of much of the all-important irrigation of Egyptian lands is now in the hands of a power which is at present hostile.

Of the African colonies, Britain's are, however, undoubtedly the best. More than one-fourth of the continent is covered by the Sahara desert, and there is another large desert, the Kalahari, in the South. The average density of the population in Africa is about twelve to a square mile, as compared with about forty to a square mile in the United States. The density of population of the British colonies is everywhere above the average for the continent, while the possessions of every other power have an average density below the continental average.

France Is Biggest Holder.

France and Great Britain now share equally about two-thirds of Africa. The remainder is divided up between Italy, Belgium, Spain and Portugal.

It is France who is the largest holder of territory in Africa. She has the Island of Madagascar in the Indian ocean off the southeast African coast, Morocco, Algiers and Tunis. But since so much of her holdings include desert land—she virtually owns the Sahara—her 4,232,000 square miles of territory have an average population of only nine souls to the square mile. Her African colonial subjects number about 38,500,000 in all.

Britain's colonies are the home of approximately 65,000,000 persons. Including Egypt, these colonies cover 3,925,000 square miles, making the population about 16 to the square mile. The British colonies, which stretch the full length of Africa on the eastern side of the continent, are the most inhabitable sections.

In annexing Ethiopia, Italy will have added about 350,000 square miles to her colonial empire, and will have gathered another 10,000,000 persons under the Italian flag. With the new conquest, the population of her African colonies rises from 2.5 persons to the square mile to 10.5 persons to the square mile. She now controls nearly 1,267,000 square miles of Africa, with a population of 13,350,000 persons.

Belgium's territory, while it is large, consists almost entirely of equatorial jungle, which is not at the present very valuable. What its worth will be when and if the jungle of the Belgian Congo is ever cleared, is unknown. There are not many people able to exist in these 920,000 square miles, the population being about ten persons to the square mile, with a total of 9,584,000.

Spain's Share Sparsely Settled.

Even more sparse is the population of Portugal's several African colonies, chief among which are Angola, bordering the Atlantic coast to the south of the Belgian Congo, and Mozambique along the Indian ocean on the mainland opposite Madagascar. The Portuguese territory embraces a little less than 800,000 square miles, with a little over 7,000,000 inhabitants, or about nine to the square mile.

Spain's 140,000 square miles of African territory, chiefly in Morocco and on the Atlantic seaboard west of the Sahara, are inhabited by only about 900,000 persons, or 6.5 to the square mile.

The popular conception that colonies in Africa offer the European colonizing nations an outlet for their excess populations has been proved more or less false. With all the colonization and empire building of 400 years, only one person in 50 on the African continent today is white. There are in all only about 3,000,000 whites.

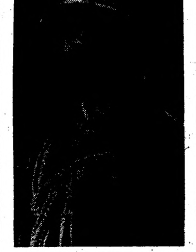
It is also doubtful that the Dark Continent and its people present any great market for goods manufactured in Europe. Natives, largely of a primitive character, require little of the manufactured goods of civilization. It may be possible that with continued development this market will be built up. But such development takes an enormous amount of capital.

Pietro Badoglio, Italy's new viceroy of Ethiopia, surveys the lay of the land as an aide points it out to him.

That is the one big disappointment to Italy in her conquest of Ethiopia. The land, exclusive of the central plateau, is poor, the natural resources are ridiculously less than they have been estimated in the popular fancy of those who seek to justify Il Duce's bloody war, and the people are largely nomadic in nature.

Colonization Is Difficult.

Mussolini claimed a double purpose in his conquest of the ancient kingdom of Abyssina—room for his overcrowded people to expand, and the obtainment of raw materials for Italian industries. But Italian people are apparently not so willing to become colonists in an unpleasant and uncomfortable land. In Eritrea, which has been Italian now for 50 years, there are only about 100 colonists.



Recent picture of the defeated Emperor Haile Selassie.

The entire Ogaden area, with the provinces of Boran and Bale, so completely conquered by the forces of General Graziani, are of little or no value, being principally desert. He has not yet moved into the rich agricultural regions of the Arussi plateau, although that is scheduled to be his next step.

Cotton and other forms of agriculture are considered possible in Ogaden, but only if extensive and expensive irrigation is provided. That is true of most of the regions which Italy has conquered in Ethiopia—they must, if they are to be of much value, be developed by tremendous outlays of capital, and fresh capital is a commodity in which Italy is lacking to a disturbing degree, especially since her trade has been pinched by the sanctions placed upon her by members of the League of Nations.

There has been some romantic gossip of vast oil deposits in Ethiopia, especially in the Ogaden district, but these have been largely denied by the facts. What mineral resources are present will be found for the larger part in the Danakil country to the northeast, but even these are uncertain. There is some salt, which Italy mined during the war—at a cost all out of proportion to its value in peace times.

Italy Must Aid Colonists.

The important part of Ethiopia is the central plateau, whose population is the traditional enemy of the tribes on the outskirts below. Here it is that Mussolini plans to put most of his colonists. The country is agriculturally rich and the climate, while it is not pleasant to white people by any means, is at least livable. While the plateau may be said to be conquered, it is not yet entirely occupied by Italian armies, the Gojjam and Shoa being still unoccupied.

If the colonization of the plateau is to be successful, the colonists must be given a great deal of aid by the mother country. The fact that the colonists will start from scratch will be a boon to Italian industry, for the demand for heavy goods for the building of a new nation should give millions more work. It is believed that the colonists will be able to raise cereals and live stock, finding a market for them in Italy and selling them for prices which will be higher than the world market for the same goods.

One of the principal problems facing the new Ethiopian emperor and his viceroy, General Badoglio, is what to do with the natives. It is hardly possible that they can be driven from the land; they certainly will not be allowed to compete with the colonists on equal terms, for they will be able to work for far smaller compensation, the Italians being unable to compete with their low standard of living. The situation will be much the same as that which the Japanese peasants found in attempting to colonize Manchuria.

With the exception of some little platinum and gold, the mineral resources of Ethiopia are largely a fable. The wealth, if any, which it will add to Italy will have to be worked out of the land in hard Italian sweat—and with the capitalization of hundreds of millions of dollars. Italy hasn't got the hundreds of millions.

As a matter of fact, the war of conquest up to the capture of Addis Ababa and the flight of Emperor Haile Selassie had cost the Italians approximately $900,000,000, or more than 100 times what the United States paid Russia for Alaska. The cost of pacifying the country will bring the war bill over the billion dollar mark.

But she has now fulfilled what Mussolini says has been the dream of Fascism for 15 years. Italy has become an empire. It sounds big. And it earns Il Duce invaluable plaudits from his people.

Channel Marks

Somebody has said that it is not so remarkable that Columbus discovered America as it would have been if he hadn't discovered it. But, though Columbus never dreamed that he had discovered America, or even that there was an America to discover, the credit for his exploit can never be taken away from him.

Today looking out of a window on the coast of Maine I can see dozens of channel buoys without which steamships would find it as difficult to find their way into the harbor as it was for the Genoese explorer to discover San Salvador.

Some of these marks are lighthouses, some of them are red or black spars, some of them are great iron buoys which blow a warning whistle with every lift and fall of the sea.

To maintain this system of warnings, which is found at the entrance of every port on both coasts of America, required not only a great deal of money, but an almost incredible amount of courage on the part of the lighthouse builders, and the men whose business it is to see that the buoys are always in their place, ready to give their warnings.

Neither storm nor cold can turn from their watchful task.

* * *

Let a single buoy go astray, or a single lighthouse fail to "throw it's beam across the wave," and every ship entering or leaving port may be in danger.

To build up this almost perfect system has required many years and a great deal of risk.

But were the marks not carefully watched and tended, reaching a port either by night or by day would be a perilous business.

There was once a master mariner who when asked how he could know every rock in the entrance to a harbor said:

"I don't. But I know where the deep water is."

* * *

In our own little voyages to and fro on our way, we are just as well supplied with channel marks as are the ships that move in and out of the ports along the seaboard.

If we heed these marks we pass in safety. If we are even just a little careless disaster is sure to follow.

Make it your business to "know where the deep water is," and you will have no trouble.

Disregard the warning that they carry as they rock on the waves, and not even a little port-to-port journey will be safe.

Many rocks and shoals beset every journey from the cradle to the grave.

But ours is an old race, and it has accumulated much knowledge acquired from those who have gone before.

Make use of that knowledge if you want to go safely through existence.

"Take chances," and hunt out what you fancy may be short cuts, and you need not be surprised if you pile up your little bark on the rocks, or sink her before you reach the port which is the goal of your ambition.

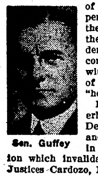
Guffey Coal Act Is Declared Invalid

SIX members of the Supreme court of the United States ruled that the Guffey act to control the bituminous coal industry is invalid, and another of the New Deal experiments goes into the discard. This is the act which President Roosevelt urged congress to pass notwithstanding doubts of its constitutionality "however reasonable." Five justices—Sutherland, Butler, Van Devanter, McReynolds, and Roberts—joined in the majority opinion which invalidated the whole act. Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone joined in a dissenting opinion in which they upheld the act. Chief Justice Hughes held in a separate opinion that the act was constitutional with respect to the marketing provisions but unconstitutional with respect to the labor regulations.



Sen. Guffey

The court in the majority opinion held that there is no authority in the Constitution for the control of the coal industry attempted in the Guffey act. The act was not valid either under the commerce clause or the welfare clause. Power was unlawfully delegated to set up a coal code similar to the codes of the invalidated NRA and the regulations establishing working hours of miners were a violation of the fifth amendment prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law. Mining, the court declared, is a local industry, the state jurisdiction whereof the federal government has no authority to invade.

Congress provided that if one part of the act were held unconstitutional other parts should not be affected. But the majority declined to accept that arrangement, ruling that the price fixing provisions were inextricably interwoven with the labor regulations.

Senator Guffey, author of the act, declined to comment on the opinion, but it was said he was preparing a substitute measure.

John Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, said that "it is a sad commentary upon our form of government when every decision of the Supreme court seems designed to fatten capital and starve and destroy labor."

Tugwell's Housing Hit by Court Decision

THE resettlement administration headed by Rexford Guy Tugwell was declared by the District of Columbia court of appeals to be "clearly unconstitutional delegation of power," in a case involving a model community project in Somerset county, New Jersey.

Going beyond the issue before them, the justices of the Appeals court called the entire relief appropriations act of 1935 into question. The act was invalid and hence RA was invalid, according to the court. Legally, however, none of the rest of the act will be affected by the decision because the other multitudinous activities of the New Deal under the appropriation were not before the court.

Solicitor Gen. Stanley Reed said an appeal would be taken to the Supreme court at once.

Uncle Sam Stands by Nine Power Pact

NEWS that Japan was greatly enlarging her force in North China led the State department in Washington to announce that the position of the United States is the same as that outlined last December by Secretary Hull affirming its support of the nine power pact that guarantees China's territorial integrity. At that time Mr. Hull said this country has a binding faith in the fundamental principles of its traditional policy. This government adheres to the provisions of the treaties to which it is a party and continues to bespeak respect by all nations for the provisions of treaties solemnly entered into for the purpose of facilitating and regulating, to reciprocal and common advantage.

At the State department it was said that the reaffirmation of support of the nine power pact does not mean that the administration will abandon its policy of declining to take the initiative in any attempt to curb Japan for violations of the pact. This was attempted by Henry L. Stimson, secretary of state in the Hoover administration, with the gain of nothing but Japanese ill will.

Japanese military strength in North China south of the Great Wall is now said to be fully 15,000 men. There are about 80,000 more in Manchukuo and still others in Inner Mongolia.

War Debts Will Be Defaulted Again

NEITHER Great Britain nor France has any intention of paying the installments on the American war debt due June 15. And almost certainly all the other debtor nations except Finland will follow the example of the two big ones and again default. British Foreign Minister Eden talked about the debts with Leon Blum, who probably will be premier of France soon, but there was no indication that either one was planning to make a payment. Blum told the American club in Paris he hoped the war debt "misunderstanding" might be cleared up, but he was just trying to be pleasant to the people of both America and France without spending any money.

Of course the debtor nations would like to have the issue cleared up, for as long as they are in default they are subject to the restrictions of the Johnson act which makes it unlawful for any person in the United States to purchase or sell the bonds, securities or other obligations of any foreign government or to make any loans to such a government while that government is in default in payment of its obligations to the United States.

President of Bolivia Is Compelled to Resign

JOSE LUIS TEJADA SORZANO was forced to resign the presidency of Bolivia by a junta of army officers and Socialists who staged a bloodless coup d'etat in La Paz. Col. German Busch, acting chief of the general army staff, leader of the coup, will be at the head of the government until Col. David Toro, hero of the war with Paraguay, returns from the Chaco, when Toro will be installed as president.

The immediate objective of the new administration was complete settlement of a general strike which the officers asserted was imperilling the country's economic stability. The labor federation quickly suspended the strike movement, expressing solidarity with the army-Socialist coup.

Italy Releases Alleged Leader in King's Killing

DR. ANTON PAVELIC, alleged leader of Ustashi, the Croatian terrorist organization, and accused as one of the "master minds" in the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia in Marseilles, has been set free by the Italian authorities. Released with him was his lieutenant, Eugene Kvaternik. The two were arrested at Turin in October, 1934, soon after the murder of Alexander, but the French authorities who were working on the case were never permitted to question them and an Italian tribunal refused the request of the French government for their extradition to France for trial.

General Is the New Premier of Poland

POLAND feels that another European war is more than likely to break out soon, and she intends to be ready to take part in the conflict. A new government has been installed with Gen. Felician Slawoj-Skladkowski as premier and minister of the interior. The general took the oath of office wearing his uniform, which was taken as symbolic of the government's program. Poland will be adequately armed. Opposition leaders are warned that they will be prosecuted, as they were by Pilsudski after 1930.

Borah Is Loser in the Ohio Primaries

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention, Borah captured only five, the others, including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The winning delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional.

Senator Borah

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckenridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

About twenty of Pennsylvania's delegation to the Republican convention were pledged to support the popular choice of the state, which turned out to be Mr. Borah, no other name being officially entered at the April 28 primary. The delegation, which is uninstructed, has now voted that those members must keep their pledge on the first ballot or until it becomes manifestly impossible for their choice to win. This action was taken on motion of former Senator David A. Reed.

Former Governor Small of Illinois Dies

LEN SMALL, twice governor of Illinois and prominent in the politics of the state for nearly forty years, died suddenly in a Kankakee hospital from an embolism resulting from an operation. He was seventy-three years old. Mr. Small's career was rather stormy. His enemies were many and bitter, and he fought them courageously; his friends were devoted to him, and he was always loyal to them. In addition to his eight years as governor, he served two terms as state treasurer. Moreover, he was defeated for governor four times. He sought the Republican nomination again in the recent primary but was defeated.

Tugwell's Report on Resettlement Work

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration pay roll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $98,347,005 has been spent and a total of $173,091,823 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 unincumbered.

R. G. Tugwell

Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $36,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 1, the report said, 59,521 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC pay roll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 800,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $100,000,000 through June 30.

Inflation Bill Defeated by the House

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature.

President Still Wants Ship Canal and Quoddy

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 29, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $9,000,000 for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

Starhemberg Ousted From Austrian Cabinet

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at outs with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out.

Italy May Withdraw From League of Nations

BECAUSE the League of Nations council would not immediately recognize Italy's annexation of Ethiopia and the creation of the new Roman empire, Premier Mussolini recalled his representatives from Geneva, and before long Italy may quit the league entirely. At present it is merely "not participating" in its activities.

The Italians at Addis Ababa are executing many natives for espionage or murder, among them being the giant umbrella carrier of Haile Selassie. A number of newspaper men have been expelled because of "anti-Italian activities and espionage." Among them were George Steer, correspondent for the London Times and the New York Times; Isadore Nebenzahl, a representative of the Havas (French) News agency; Alkeos Angiopolo, a Hearst correspondent, and M. D. Robillard, director of an Ethiopian newspaper.

Household Questions

To prevent cheese becoming stringy when making Welsh rabbit, do not use a high temperature when melting. Have only just enough heat to melt cheese.

* * *

Do not allow bread to rise too high before putting into the oven if you wish to have a fine grained bread.

* * *

A teaspoonful of mixed pickle spices tied in a small bag and added to the water in which fish, ham or tongue is boiled, will add a very pleasing flavor.

* * *

A saucerful of quicklime placed in a damp closet or cupboard, will absorb all dampness.

* * *

To prevent halibut falling to pieces while boiling, wrap in cheesecloth and simmer in boiling water. About 30 minutes' time is required to boil two and a half or three pounds of halibut.

Always make it your business to keep your larder supplied with about a dozen cans of soups, meats and fruits. When an unexpected guest arrives for lunch, you will then be able to serve a good meal.

When any portion of a velvet gown is crushed from pressure, hold the part over a basin of hot water, the wrong side next to the water. The pile will soon be restored.

To keep bath enamel in good condition, always put in a little cold water first. Exceedingly hot water is likely to make it crack and peel off.

Potatoes need to be hilled to prevent the tubers from greening. Some gardeners make the mistake of hilling such root crops as beets, carrots, onions and parsnips, thus retarding their growth.

Never leave fish, unless salted, soaking in water. Too long soaking removes the flavor and makes the fish flabby.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

Death stalks the highways of the nation. It rides the running-board of your car when you drive too fast.

Many traffic authorities claim that speed was the leading cause of our toll of 36,400 traffic deaths and admitted injuries during 1935. Others agree that it is one of two or three of the most important causes.

It stands to reason that the faster you travel the more serious will be the injury when you collide with another object or leave the road. Your car should be kept under control at all times. Driving sixty miles an hour in rainy weather or on roads that will not take that speed is reckless, driving and accidents will result from it.

Speed may be desirable at times, but safety is absolutely necessary all of the time.

Mrs. Axel Nelson has rented a farm near Rosewood and will move there in a short time.

Burhans For Representative

The Stephen Messenger endorses the candidacy of Ira H. Burhans its neighbor and fellow townsman for Representative in the Legislature from Marshall County, because it believes that the increasing complexity of the State Government requires trained men to make its laws. There is scarcely any activity of businessman or farmer in which the State does not directly or indirectly license, tax, supervise and more or less control.

The Messenger endorses Mr. Burhans because it does not believe in communism, fascism, or any of the isms which are blatantly proclaimed thruout the state as cure-alls for our present difficulties.

The Messenger endorses Mr. Burhans because he believes in the form of government established and fought for by our ancestors. He believes in constitutional government, with the Supreme Court acting as a check to ill considered measures pushed through the Congress by a subservient majority at the behest of the power greedy executice department.

The Messenger endorses Mr. Burhans because it knows that State taxes have increased the past five years until the rate is now the highest in Minnesota's history; public funds have been wasted; the number of partisan employees has been greatly increased; exorbitant rent is being paid for public agencies; even the board of control has been thrown into politics; people's money has been poured out "in unjust contracts some of which were only stopped when outraged citizens brought suits in the courts."

The Messenger endorses Mr. Burhans because we have lived with him for the past 17 years and know his abilities as a lawyer and a speaker; and believe he understands the problems of Marshall county, and will work honestly to solve them; and lastly because he is a good mixer and a good fellow."

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter.

"That was a lucky break for you, because, if he'd been here, he'd've had you chucked right out of the front door. Think, kid! He hasn't spoken to his son for years. Paid him fifty dollars a week not to use the family name. And then a cabaret girl turns up to say she's married the boy, and he committed murder — or was accused of it—because somebody caught her picking pockets in a night-club."

"It doesn't sound good—the way you put it."

"That's nothing to the way he'd put it. But he's not here. And that's not the best of your luck. The best of your luck is that I am."

"Why?"

"Because I can help you, and I'm going to. I am—if you'll let me. If you'll let me go on being John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

"Oh, that's the game, is it?"

"Listen. John Clarke Ridder, fake, can be the best friend John Clarke Ridder, real, ever had in his life. I can get Winslow to take your case, if he don't know I'm a fake. I can get Judge Hambidge to use his influence, and that's plenty. I can get money from home, because I'm making good. Look—read that!"

He darted across the room, and to the table drawer, returning with the letter from Mrs. Ridder.

"Read it quick! 'Any shock might prove serious. He must change his will.' And he still reads the papers. All right. What if he does read about a bum, named Jay Rogers, that married a night-club girl and is on trial for killing a Tammany boss. Jay Rogers don't mean a thing. But, if he reads that John Clarke Ridder, Jr., did all this, on top of everything else he's done, what's the answer?"

"What's the answer if he don't?"

"The answer then is that a noble young fellow, named John Clarke Ridder—and that's me—gets a whole lot interested in an unfortunate guy named Jay Rogers. Why? Because he believes him to be innocent—that's why. And, don't make any mistake, a guy like Ridder believing it's going to start a lot of other people believing it, too. I write my mother that I've got to have money to carry on the fight, and I get it, because the old man decides I can't be so bad, after all. Maybe he gets his newspaper into the scrap—not for his own son, which wouldn't help much, but for a stranger. Whether that happens or not, I'll get a job and a lawyer, and use 'em both for you. I'll use all the family influence for you. And, when it's over, and your husband's acquitted, I'll be in some position to talk to the old man for you."

"What if he isn't acquitted?"

"You've got to face that chance, either way."

Peggy looked at him with hard eyes.

"You're a pretty smart fellow," she said. "Pretty smart—if you can talk me into keeping my mouth shut while you get the money, and the position, and everything my husband ought to have."

"Will he get it if I don't? Use your nut, Peggy. What do I gain? If you spill the beans tonight, what good does it do you? And what harm does it do me? Maybe I go to jail for a few weeks. But it don't get your husband out of jail, does it? This way might, and it's the only way. Think it over."

"Will you answer me one question?" the girl asked.

"Shoot."

"If you've nothing to gain, why are you doing this?"

The Duke had been pacing the room. He stopped short now, and his clenched hands fell limp at his sides.

"Damned if I know," he responded. "And that's the truth."

They could hear the clock ticking in the hall.

Then it struck two.

"All right," Peggy said, at last. "I'm going to play it your way. Where do we go from here?"

"I think you'd better go to bed," the Duke answered.

"Here?"

"Why not?" grinned the Duke. "You've got a whole lot more right here than I have. There's a guest-room that Willetts always keeps ready."

The girl hesitated.

"What time can I get back to New York?" she asked.

"There's a good train around nine o'clock."

"All right."

Barry opened a door the other side of the library, and switched on the lights. "There you are," he said.

"All right."

"It just struck me," he remarked. "You don't suppose your husband might have given his real name?"

"No. But that's one reason I want to get back. You better come with me, too. I think you're on the level, but I'm not so sure Jack's going to think so."

"O. K.," Barry assented. "Breakfast at eight. Good night, Mrs. Rogers."

"Good night, Mr. Ridder."

She smiled, a wan ghost of a smile.

Standing before the dying fire, Barry exclaimed: "What a damned fool I am!" and stuffed the letter into his pocket. The newspaper lay before him, and, with it, he came back to the hearth. "Let's see what it's all about," he said.

The story filled the first page, and overflowed onto the second and third. Judge Hambidge's eagerly-awaited decision was crowded into an upper corner of the fourth page, with a two-column picture of the Judge. There was no editorial comment. Evidently, there hadn't been time for that yet. "For some unexplained reason," the paper said, "the murder was not reported to the police until nearly noon." The body had been found by the Filipino servant shortly after eight that morning. Mike Kelly's skull had been fractured by a single blow with a heavy cut-glass whiskey decanter that lay close by, its contents still undisturbed. There was no sign of a struggle.

The Filipino boy's yarn was straight enough. Kelly had come home just before eleven o'clock. He was a little drunk, the boy admitted. He had let himself in with his latch-key, and gone straight to the dining room, where he rang violently. The boy had responded, and got out the liquor and the glasses. Then a young man had called. His name was Rogers, the boy remembered, and he said he had known Kelly in Palm Beach. Kelly had said, "All right; show him into the drawing room," and the boy had done so, and brought in the tray. Then he had gone back downstairs to the servants' quarters.

A little while later, he had heard angry voices in the drawing room, and had listened outside, in the hall. What he had heard was pretty much what the girl had repeated, but there were a few additions, in the way of threats from the visitor. The Filipino decided that it was none of his business, and returned to his room. Ten minutes later, anxious in spite of himself, he remounted the back stairs. As he reached the top, he heard the drawing room door closed noisily, and saw the caller hurry into the hall and through the front door, which he banged after him. It was then nearly midnight. The Filipino had been on duty since seven that morning, and, reassured, he tiptoed down the stairs, and went to bed. That was all he knew until, eight hours later, he came upon Mike Kelly's body lying face-down on the floor.

The Duke was just about to go to bed himself, when he noticed a small headline. "Artist's Wife Crushed by Taxi." That would be the accident that upset Judge Hambidge.

"I might talk to Winslow at the Hambidges," he thought, sleepily. "But I guess Peggy's right. Better see Jack first. I've got a date with Winslow at his office on Monday."

The hall clock struck three.

Nevertheless, the Duke was up an hour before breakfast.

He shaved, and bathed, and tossed a few things into an over-night bag he'd seen in the closet. Emerging, he ran into Willetts.

"Breakfast for two," the Duke ordered. "Mrs. Rogers and I are taking the 9:27 to New York."

He thought the butler looked at him sharply.

As their train left Southampton, Peggy looked even shabbier in her cheap black dress and her little red beret. Her face was very white, for want of make-up or sleep. "It's funny," she said, awkwardly, "but I sort of feel that everything's going to be all right now."

"Why don't you and the boy move out here?"

"To stay, you mean?"

"Sure. I can square it with Willetts. Come along, the end of the week, Peggy. After all, it's where you belong, you know."

"I belong with Jack," she said. "And, anyway, has it struck you that the old man might come back unexpected? He's been mad six years. What's he going to do when he finds out about all this?"

"Well," Barry hazarded, "if we've got his son out—"

"He won't care," Peggy interrupted, her voice again hard and pitiful. "He never did.

"He smashed Jack's fiddle. Jack wanted to be a violinist. He could've been, too. But the old man found he was taking lessons. 'I don't want any jazz-banders in my family,' he snorted. 'You're going to take my place when I die.'

"That started it. He'd always been hard on Jack. Bossy, the old man is. And you can't boss Jack. He got another fiddle. He was good on it, too. When he went up to Harvard, he used to play it at parties.

"When his father heard about that, he threatened to cut off Jack's allowance. So Jack stopped fiddling, and began to drink. And, one night when he was awful drunk, he wrote the old man's name on a check. He tried to get it back the next day, but the bank had turned it down, and the guy he'd given it to was sore, and had Jack arrested.

"Jack had sold his second fiddle to make good. He never got another one. The old man cut Jack loose. He came up to Boston, with a newspaper that printed the story in his hands. Cold as ice, he was. 'You've disgraced me,' he said, 'and you'll go on disgracing me, if I'll let you. I won't. You can go where you like and do what you please, but not with my name. If you ever use that again, you can starve.'"

Peggy turned to the window.

Then, abruptly, "How are we going to get in to see him?" she asked.

"You're his wife," Barry answered.

"And you?"

"I'm his friend. And my name's Ridder."

Even Peggy's story didn't quite prepare the Duke for that meeting with his other self.

He'd rather expected to see one of those weaklings who find the world a vast conspiracy against them.

John Clarke Ridder, Jr., proved to be merely a frightened youngster. A slim, rather frail lad in his early twenties, with soft, dark hair, and large, dark eyes, and a peculiarly sensitive mouth. His hands were soft and sensitive, too, but there was nothing effeminate about the boy. "Gee, I'm glad to see you, Peg," he blurted. "I was getting a little bit worried."

Peggy's presence reassured him. Evidently, he counted on her, and felt safe while she was with him.

"Jack," she said, quietly and significantly, "I've brought your friend, Mr. Ridder. He's going to help us."

"That's great," he observed.

Fortunately for them, the guard had other things on his mind. He kept disappearing, and coming back, and looking away from them to a paper that someone had given him, and that seemed irritating. In a low voice, Peg outlined what had happened, and the conclusion that had been reached.

The boy turned to Barry.

Young, frightened, and soft, he could reason quickly, and talk straight.

"I don't understand," he said to the Duke. "If these people will do things for you, because they think you're Jack Ridder, why won't they do 'em for me, when they know I'm Jack Ridder?"

"Because they like me. They've never met you. And because my record's clear. I'm not accused of murder under circumstances that—well, they don't sound pretty, at first, do they?"

"They do not."

"And, of course, there's your mother."

The sensitive mouth tightened.

Barry gave him the letter he had shown Peggy.

The lad read it.

"The old man's got her buffaloed," he remarked; "same as he's got everybody else. O. K. I wouldn't have used my own name, anyway. Letting you use it's another thing, but Peggy thinks you're straight, and she's never been wrong yet. It's a queer game, but I'll sit in. What next?"

Quickly He Mapped Out His Plan.

Barry was relieved. The guard had been showing his paper to a colleague. Quickly, he mapped out his plans—so far as he had any. "I've got a date with Peter Winslow on Monday. And I'm going to cable your mother—for money. We've got to have that. I hope to get a job pretty soon, and make my own way, but, just now, there's less than a hundred and fifty dollars in the kitty, and I'm going to give most of that to Peggy for current expenses. You'd better write your mother, too—the kind of letter you'd write in answer to that, if you were in my shoes. I'll bring you the stationery, and, of course, I'll mail your letter from Southampton. We'll have to smuggle it out of here, I suppose. Now, tell me exactly what happened the night before last."

The story differed very little from the one Barry had heard, but it was full of shrewd questions that hadn't occurred to him.

"Draft Lowden"

Washington.—A week or ten days ago, the name of Frank O. Lowden was scarcely whispered around where politicians foregathered. They talked about the forthcoming Republican National convention and they mentioned Governor Landon of Kansas; Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, and others, but never was the name of Lowden mentioned.

In the short space of a fortnight, there has come first a whisper of the name of Lowden, then a mention of him as a possible Republican nominee and finally a full voice that approximates a "draft Lowden" movement.

A few weeks ago I reported to you in these columns that the prospects were very good for the Republican National convention to turn to a dark horse. There was no name at that time upon which anyone could pin a prediction but there were circumstances, undercurrent in character, that seemed to point the way to the nomination of a man not then in the forefront of political prognostications.

Of course, with the Republican convention delegates pledged and unpledged here, there, and everywhere, it is possible for almost anything to happen but my information is that the leaders desire most of all to avoid a bitter battle. They wish to avoid the very thing which New Deal political strategists have been seeking to foment. Only the final ballot will tell the story, of course, but it does appear at this time that the Republican leadership may display some good horse sense and seek to accomplish a nomination without splitting their party wide open.

This "draft Lowden" movement has come on with almost startling suddenness as I have indicated above. It has resulted from the fact, apparently, that Mr. Lowden, while he was governor of Illinois a number of years ago and since that time, has built up for himself a record as a friend of agriculture. Thus, the strategy would seem to be that the Republican leadership is turning to a man who can give President Roosevelt a run for his money in the farm belt states.

As far as I know, Mr. Lowden has not been consulted respecting the nomination. It would seem, however, that if he were nominated he would accept, despite the fact that he has not sought the nomination in any way nor has he been very active in politics since he sought the nomination for the Presidency in 1920. It was on that occasion, it will be remembered, that he and the late General Leonard Wood fought through into a convention deadlock and Warren G. Harding of Ohio finally was nominated as a compromise candidate.

It is difficult to see how the conservative element in the Republican party could refuse to back Mr. Lowden and it is equally difficult to see how the farm representation and the liberals in the party could withhold their support when the Lowden farm record is considered. But all of this represents subject matter that must await convention action because, after all, there are still other candidates who have blocks of delegates behind them and they may be unwilling to withdraw unless they are satisfied with the dark horse that finally trots out onto the convention platform.

Tax Muddle

One hears more and more discussion in Washington these days of the tax muddle in which President Roosevelt has found himself. I think it is fair to say that his prestige has suffered considerably from the way his proposed tax increase was handled and I think it is the general consensus that this year's tax bill was a proposition to which the President gave too little thought.

Sometime in the future, the history of the New Deal will be written in a clear and comprehensive manner. The story then will show in retrospect that which we can hardly understand now—the good and the bad in the bewildering adventures attempted under the policies of reform and recovery. I believe those who write that history will dwell upon the 1936 tax legislation as one of the important political weaknesses developed by Mr. Roosevelt.

As far as I know, there has never been a public official who has been entirely consistent at all times in his methods and policies. Mr. Roosevelt, being human, has been inconsistent like all of the rest and there was no reason to expect that he would be the one exception despite the fact that some of his followers maintain that he cannot make mistakes.

But to link the tax legislation with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is human, let me call attention to the further fact that he has been bold, even daring, in many of his moves. Where his quick decisions have been sound, the country has been benefited. Where he has made mistakes by acting too quickly, his spokesmen have sought to deny that there were errors.

The reason I have called attention to Mr. Roosevelt's mistakes on the tax legislation is chiefly to show something of a new awakening on the part of the general public. The way in which the senate took the tax bill that had passed the house and turned it topsy-turvy, casting out the administration's experimental levy on corporate surpluses, shows better than anything I can say how the voice of public opinion again is being heard in Washington. The "voice of the people," so often referred to by the politicians, was heard quite clear and strong by the senators and the result was a complete reversal of the position which the President desired them to take.

* * *

Here's the Point

Now, the point is this: if Mr. Roosevelt had done as he has done on numerous occasions, he could have avoided the situation that has reacted unfavorably to him. It will be recalled that several times the President has tried out his theories on various governmental problems and has studied the popular reaction to his trial balloons. He did not do this with the tax bill. He left the job of drafting the legislation to the treasury and the treasury, being populated with a number of men who have no conception whatsoever of business practices and care little for American traditions, produced a piece of legislation that would have forever prevented any business unit from saving funds to carry it through times of depression, the proverbial rainy day.

In the discussions around Washington, it is frequently stated that had Mr. Roosevelt taken his so-called tax experts into a room and made them explain the character of the bill they were presenting, much of the difficulty would have been averted. But he did not use this foresight and the result is now history. He has alienated a considerable amount of congressional support that he ordinarily could have for the mere asking.

As the tax legislation stands, it is nothing more nor less than a makeshift boost in rates. It has added nothing at all to strengthen the nation's general taxation policies. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a general study of the tax structure with the idea in mind that a wholesale revision should take place and that scientific methods should be employed. We must not forget that we have a national debt of more than thirty-one billions and that several other billions in securities are really to be counted in since those obligations are guaranteed by the United States. That debt must be paid eventually and the revenue must be raised in the only way that the federal government can get its money, namely, by taxation. The conclusion, therefore, is inescapable that we face heavy taxation and we may as well face the music.

It may be that all of the twenty-one billions in tax payments and borrowed money which Mr. Roosevelt has expended can be justified in every respect. It may be that in future years the nation will be grateful that this era of extravagance is a part of our history, but the fact still remains that when a government or an individual borrows money, that money must be returned to those who hold the evidence of the debt.

U. S. Pay Roll Grows

The civil service commission lately has compiled some statistics indicating that the merit system in the federal government is being pushed aside at an alarming rate. The commission's figures show how every President since Arthur in 1883 has expanded the scope of the classified civil service during his administration until the administration of President Roosevelt.

It would be a list much too long to record here how the number of employees of the federal government has increased each year as the government has expanded but as a matter of history it struck me as interesting to see how 41.5 per cent of employees of the federal government under President McKinley held their jobs under the civil service system and laws and how this percentage increased to 61.5 per cent under President Taft; to 72 per cent under President Wilson; to 79.8 per cent under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and to 80.1 per cent under President Hoover.

By the end of June, 1935, the number of civil service employees in the federal government amounted to only 63.3 per cent of the total number and, while the civil service commission has not tabulated the record for this year, I understand reliably that the ratio will be about 57 per cent of the total.

The total number of employees of the federal government has grown consistently since the turn of the century when it stood at 256,000. In Taft's administration, the total was 370,000. President Wilson's first administration employed 438,000 and then with the advent of the World war the government expanded its personnel to its highest point, 917,000.

As the war agencies were liquidated, the number of employees declined obviously until during the Harding and Coolidge administrations the highest point reached was 540,000. The Hoover administration numbered 583,000 on the pay rolls but the election of President Roosevelt immediately brought on greater numbers and by June 30, 1935, there were 719,000 on the federal pay roll and this number was further increased to 806,000 at the end of March this year.

Hot Political Campaigns.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—They say this will be the liveliest fight for years and years, with glee clubs gargling and the boys out with brass bands—and brass-knucks; and batteries of college professors firing on opposition professors.

But they'll never reclaim the glorious ancient spirit. We're too tame. Take '96. Now, there was a campaign for you. When Bryan was a discovery instead of a chronic recurrence.

Irvin S. Cobb

Two life-long friends would meet. "What d'ye think of this here free silver thing?" one would ask. "I think it's the greatest notion in history," the second fellow would say. "What do you think?" "I think you're a dirty such-and such!" The first man would yell, and then everybody would start bouncing those old-fashioned brass cuspidores off of everybody else's dome.

J. Edgar Boulder.

OWING to recent developments over which it had no control, I believe the Interior department temporarily has shelved the idea of changing J. Edgar Hoover's name to J. Edgar Boulder, as was previously predicted in these dispatches. But now certain critics at Washington insist on accusing that gentleman of over-advertising in connection with his latest activities. Well, he has the advantage over some press agents. When he promises a show he certainly puts it on upon the day and date announced, with the band playing "The Alcatraz Drag"—and every cage full.

Funny Foreign Names.

WORD from Warsaw is that the incumbent, the Hon. Marjan Zyndram Koscialcowski, having resigned, the president of Poland has picked as the new premier none other than Gen. Felicyan Slawogskladkowski. The latter gentleman has already been installed up to and including his first five or six syllables, the rest of the name running as a second section.

So what you mistook for static on the radio night before last was just the news broadcaster trying to pronounce him as a whole.

Ever Rising Taxes.

ANYBODY who fondly believes that, regardless of which outfit wins in November, taxes won't keep right on going up and up has a thinking apparatus that dates back quite a spell.

I'd say it dates back to the climax of the big rise, as set forth in the Bible, and is a direct inheritance from the skeptical folks who wouldn't harken to the prophetic warning.

Remember the scene, don't you? The forty days' rain still beating relentlessly down, the freshet climbing higher and higher, the animals marching in two by two.

And with the old ark starting to move and Father Noah yelling, "All aboard," and with the waters closing over their heads, those know-it-alls still gurgling through their valedictory bubbles, "Shuckin's, there ain't goin' to be no flood."

Honoring Lee and Jackson.

WHEN the Post Office department includes among the gallery of the greatest Americans, to be pictured in the new issue of memorial stamps, the faces of the Confederate chieftains, Lee and Jackson, what happens?

Why, nobody waves the bloody shirt. Nobody ennobles the sorry word "traitor" by applying it to the memories of those two gallant soldiers and simple Christian gentlemen. Nobody in the name of patriotism drags the mouldering bones of sectional rancor out of the ground. Nobody beats the "Rogue's March for Rebels" on hate's snare drum.

Instead, all over the Union, men and women applaud this generous but merited gesture. A leading paper of Boston—Boston, no less, once the mulching bed of abolition and the breeding ground for anti-southern sentiment—editorially commends the idea.

Railcar Popular in France

The railcar, or "automotrice," as it is known there, is becoming one of the most popular means of rapid passenger transport in France. At the same time great efforts are being made to increase the speed of these railcars. Every few weeks a new record is established by one of the rival constructing companies. Record was attained by M. Jean Bugatti, who drove a Bugatti railcar from Strasbourg to Paris in 3 hours 31 minutes, averaging 89.4 miles an hour. Seventy-five Bugatti railcars are now running on the French railway system. M. Jean Bugatti considers that railcars run on petrol are particularly useful for ultra-rapid transit transport over distances of three or four hundred miles.—London Sunday Observer.

State, community, county, and local safety councils are active in the prevention of accidents. They need your help. Do not feel that safety is for the other fellow. We all believe in safety, but most of us like to see it applied to some other driver and not to ourselves.

Interested citizens have taken an active interest in fostering these councils, and some very fine work is being done by them. Schools are actively engaged in teaching the coming generation the principles of safe driving. These county safety councils and community committees can only succeed if each and everyone of us do our share in helping them in this worth-while endeavor.

You are not alone -your family demands safe driving - join the Safety Council - be an example of safe driving on the road.

Sands, Secretary-Treasurer for the 15 associations in Kittson, Marshall and Pennington counties. The Grygla and Benville associations will meet at Grygla at 10 a. m., and the Newfolden association at Newfolden at 3 p. m. A joint meeting for all borrowers from the Federal Land Bank and Land Bank Commissioner in Marshall County will be held at Warren, at 1:30 p. m. on June 23rd, following a meeting of the stockholders of the Wheat Belt and Valley associations to be held at 10:00 a. m. It is expected that a large number of farmer borrowers in this vicinity will attend the meeting at Warren, and a number will be at the other meetings mentioned. Each of the associations is a farmers cooperative, and through their pledges in the form of stock, and their cooperation, have been able to demand and get a lower rate of interest on farm mortgage loans than ever before general in this country. Over 500 farmers in this county have taken advantage of this low interest, long term credit, and have borrowed over one million dollars.

A special program is planned for the meeting at Warren on the 23rd, which is to be held on the second day of the Marshall County Fair. Mr. C. E. Brown of the General Agents office, of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul will speak.

The Marshall County Fair

Program plans are nearing completion for Marshall County,s 30th Annual Fair and Agricultural Exposition which will take place at Warren on June 22, 23 and 24, day and night, according to Wm. Forsberg, president of the Marshall County Agricultural association.

The northwest will witness another spectacular program of entertainment on the race track and stage during the three days and nights of the exposition with the Lew- Rosenthal Amusement company of Waterloo, Iowa, presenting the stage attractions.

Headlining the attractions will be the Merry Whirl Revue featuring the beautiful chorines, clever comedians and the Casino Club band coming to Warren direct from the famous night clubs of the East. A dozen or more stage attractions including acrobats, high wire performers, animals and musicians will thrill the large crowds expected to attend.

On the race track humerous races will be featured each after noon, including a Free for All running race in which some of the fastest horsesin the middle west will run. Local running and pony races will also take a prominent part in the race program.

The Fair Grounds have been a place of busy activity during the past three months, with large crews of men working under the WPA, filling a deep coulee on the grounds and extending the city water main system to the grounds. These improvements have been made for the comfort of the fair visitors.

Indications are that exhibits this year will be of unusual quality and quantity, judging from inquiries received from prospective exhibitors, said J. A. Grindeland, secretrry. Copies of the premium lists may be secured by writing Mr. Grindeland at Warren.

The Marshall county exposition boasts of its attractive farm machinery display, with implement dealers from this section plannine greater displays than ever this year. A new machinery building is also being erected on the grounds.

The Marshall county 4-H clubs with their largest enrollment in history will provide outstanding exhibits and displays at the grounds in the various projects. The 4-H club division is one of the most important phases of the fair.

People from this community will attend the fair at Warren in the usual large numbers again this year. Plan a vacation for one or two days. Use the new Fair Grounds park for picnic lunches. You will have a good time at your fair June 22, 23 and 24.

4-H Clubs Win Play Contest

A total of 903 4-H club members accompanied by county agents, assistant county agents, and county club leaders from fourteen Northwestern Minnesota counties attended the 25th annual 4-H club rally at the Northwest School of Agriculture last week. Based upon attendance, interest in the class and laboratory instruction, and the keen but friendly rivalry in the one-act play, music, athletic, and livestock and farm crop judging contests, this was considered the most successful Club Week ever held on the Aggie campus.

4-H club members from East and West Ottertail, Clay, Becker, Norman, Mahnomen and East and West Polk counties were in attendance the first three days of the week, followed by delegations from Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Pennington, Red Lake and Clearwater counties the latter part of the week. This made it possible to offer exeellent accommodations in the dormitories, dining hall, auditorium, and class and laboratory buildings.

In the one-act play contest, the Marshall county cast under the direction of Mrs. H. Rosendahl, assisted by county club leader Evelyn Bierbaum, and County Agent R. A. Reierson, won first place on the play "Say It With Taffy". This cast will represent Northwestern Minnesota at the State Contest to be held at the State Fair.

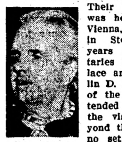
Rural Housewives of World in Convention

RURAL housewives from many countries began their third triennial conference in Washington with Mrs. Alfred Watt of Canada presiding.



Mrs. Alfred Watt

Their first meeting was held in 1930 in Vienna, and the second in Stockholm three years later. Secretaries Hull and Wallace and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, extended greetings to the visitors, but beyond that there were no set speeches and little formality. Instead, the farm wives held "exchange of experience" sessions, viewed elaborate exhibits of rural needlework and crafts of organized countrywomen of the participating nations, and attended "open houses" held by all branches of the federal government in which countrywomen are particularly interested.

In exchanging experiences the women learned, among other things, that:

English groups have stimulated a remunerative revival of quilting to supplement the family income.

Australian countrywomen maintain seaside homes for convalescents.

Canada's Federated Women's institute promotes clubs for rural youth and combats maternal and infant mortality.

By conducting evening classes for young girls Danish countrywomen have helped to check their migration to town to seek factory work.

The East Africa Women's league visits native women in prisons and hospitals and provides information to prospective white settlers.

Huge Deficiency Bill Passed by Senate

THE senate by a vote of 62 to 14 passed the deficiency bill carrying $2,875,000,000, of which sum $1,425,000,000 is handed to the President to spend as he pleases for "relief and work relief." As passed by the house, the measure turned the entire amount of relief money over to WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins.

Three Democratic senators voted against the bill—Tydings of Maryland, Bulkley of Ohio and Byrd of Virginia.

By a senate amendment, the bill authorizes the President to order a restudy of reports on the $200,000,000 Florida ship canal and allocate another $10,000,000 to carry on work upon it during the coming fiscal year.

Efforts to do anything for the Passamaquoddy tidal project in Maine had proved unavailing.

New York's Wage Law Is Held Invalid

NEW YORK state's law providing minimum wages for women and minors was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme court on the ground that it conflicts with the fourteenth amendment by violating freedom of contract. The decision, written by Justice Butler, was concurred in by Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Roberts. Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo dissented. A number of other states have statutes similar to the one thus held invalid.

Zioncheck Nabbed for Test of His Sanity

MARION ZIONCHECK, the peculiar representative from Seattle, Wash., outdid all his previous performances in one day of wild deeds and landed in the Washington municipal hospital where his sanity was to be tested. He had made two attempts to see the President, saying he wanted to ask for machine guns and tanks to blow up a hotel where he suspected his bride was hiding; sought a warrant for the arrest of Vice President Garner on the belief that he knew where Mrs. Zioncheck was concealed, and in various other ways persuaded the authorities that his mental condition should be investigated.

Civil War in A. F. of L. Expected Soon

NINE of the richest unions in the American Federation of Labor, having more than a million members, probably will be suspended soon by the federation's executive council, and at the next convention they will be expelled if the council can command the necessary two-thirds majority. Thus will come to a crisis the internecine contest between the craft unionists led by President William Green and the industrial unionists who follow John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers.

Green wants to continue to organize industry by skilled groups while Lewis would seek to unite all workers, skilled and unskilled, by industries into one big union.

The craft unionists, it was learned, intend to suspend the charters of the nine industrial unions at the July executive council session, a power granted the council under the A. F. of L. constitution.

Lewis' group of unions includes 400,000 miners, Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers, David Dubinsky's International Ladies' Garment union, the oil workers, typographers, flat glass workers, hat, cap, and millinery workers, mine, mill, and smelter workers, and textile workers.

Liner Queen Mary Fails to Equal the Record

BRITAIN'S magnificent new liner Queen Mary was given an uproarious welcome at New York as she completed the first leg of her maiden transatlantic passage. The giant steamship behaved well in every way but fell short by 42 minutes of equaling the record set a year ago by the French liner Normandie. The Queen Mary's officers offered no apology for this, but it was public knowledge that her speed had been cut down by a fog off the American coast.

The Queen Mary averaged 29.13 knots on a measured course of 3,158 nautical miles, between Cherbourg breakwater and Ambrose light, completing the journey between those two points in 4 days 12 hours 24 minutes.

Business Men Oppose New Guffey Coal Bill

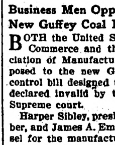
BOTH the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers is firmly opposed to the new Guffey-Vinson coal control bill designed to replace the act declared invalid by the United States Supreme court.

Harper Sibley, president of the chamber, and James A. Emery, general counsel for the manufacturers' association, recalled, in almost identical language, that the most widely discredited phase of the defunct NRA was price fixing through codes. The new Guffey-Vinson bill, they said, like the old bill, is designed to establish price fixing by levying a prohibitory tax on products of mines which do not submit to its provisions.

"It is time," Mr. Emery said, "that we began to analyze these stop-gaps drafted hurriedly in an attempt to make permanent law of the things that are beyond control of congress and of the federal government; things which must, in the end, be harmful to the nation as a whole. Those who object to the new Guffey-Vinson bill did not even have an opportunity to present their valid reasons for objecting."

Pope, on His Birthday, Denounces Communism

CATHOLICS the world over celebrated the seventy-ninth birthday of Pope Pius XI, and the pontiff himself marked the day by attending a solemn mass in St. Peter's in the presence of 40,000 pilgrims who went to Rome especially for the occasion. These were mainly members of the Catholic Action organization which Pius XI founded, and to them he spoke for nearly an hour. He denounced communism, as he has done on other occasions, and declared the Catholic press was one of the best forces in combating the communists.



Pope Pius XI

It was evident to all observers the pope's age is beginning to tell on him and that he found the long ceremony very much of a strain.

That the pope's health is causing some concern also in Vatican circles was shown by the fact that the plans that were originally made for the pope to bless the crowd gathered in St. Peter's square from the outer balcony of the Basilica were abandoned at the last minute.

Japanese Find Excuse for Action in China

THERE was every reason to believe that Japan had found, or manufactured, excuses for further encroachments in northern China, and that serious conflict between the two nations would ensue unless China were submissive. The Japanese alleged that a bridge on the railway line between Tangku and Tientsin was destroyed and that there was an attempt to wreck a troop train. The highest Japanese officers in North China were summoned to a conference in Tientsin.

Yakichiro Suma, Japanese consul general in Nanking, declared publicly that China must choose either "mutual interdependence with Japan or war with Japan," and he said he had informed Generalissimo Kai-shek, Chinese dictator, of this viewpoint. "Japan has gone too far to retreat now and must advance straight ahead with immutable convictions," Suma said.

The Japanese military command, meanwhile, disclosed frankly some of their demands upon China. These included:

1. Privilege of building railroads, military and civilian air bases and army barracks.
2. Establishment of regular air service between China and Japan.
3. An economic, political and military position for Japan in China.

Garden Homes Planned by Housing Administrator

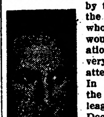
STEWART McDONALD, federal housing administrator, outlined to newspaper men a new program which provides for the construction of "garden homes" outside of large cities that will aid in the gradual movement of industrial workers from urban and suburban areas to small plots several miles out in the country. He said President Roosevelt was enthusiastic over the plan.

Emphasizing that "this is not anything in the way of a benevolent proposition" and that no grants of federal funds were involved, Mr. McDonald said it would be accomplished through a broadening of FHA regulations to permit government insurance of mortgages on such property. This will enable bankers and other leaders to advance funds for the development of these "in between" areas for residential purposes, he said.

"The President believes that whenever possible people should be on an acre to two acres of ground with trees, gardens and shrubbery," he said. "This plan has been made possible by inventions and improvements in the last ten years. Now we have good roads, electricity, water facilities, and other conveniences for those areas in between the city and the country. Such a program was not possible during the last building boom."

Raymond Moley's Warning to the Administration

RAYMOND MOLEY, who used to be considered the chief of the "brain trust," fears that his friend President Roosevelt may be destroyed politically by the radicals within the Democratic party who at the same time would "destroy moderation and destroy the very system which he attempted to improve." In a speech before the National Economy league in New York, Doctor Moley said he saw confronting the Roosevelt administration these dangers:



Raymond Moley

1. That federal relief agencies will be turned into political machines to perpetuate the rule of state and local politicians.

2. The tendency, "all too prevalent in this congress, to engage in muckraking, marauding expeditions which destroy the liberty of all of the people while they seek to restrain the abuses of a few. These orgies of public castigation . . . may be means of furthering individual political ambitions, they may be build-ups for those with Presidential hankerings, but so far as the public interest is concerned they are simply sound and fury."

3. The tendency "of those in charge of the New Deal to over-emphasize adherence to the belief in the philosophy of the movement and to minimize the importance of competent technical administration."

Doctor Moley defended capitalism; declared that already there has been a wide distribution of wealth in this country, and warned the average man that he eventually must pay the mounting bills for relief—that he is the "missionary being fattened for a cannibalistic feast."

Germany Celebrates Her Revived Navy

WITH three days of maneuvers, reviews and ceremonies, Germany celebrated the revival of her navy, and closed the big event by dedicating at Kiel the huge monument to the men and ships that went down in the Battle of Jutland. Reichsfuehrer Hitler was aboard the dispatch boat Grille and from its topmast flew the old flag of the kaisers. In the maneuvers the new navy, about fifty battleships, cruisers, destroyers and submarines repelled an "enemy" attack on Kiel harbor. New submarines and speedboats, first units of the fleet being built under the Anglo-German treaty which wiped away the Versailles treaty limitations of the reich navy to 100,000 tons, were shown publicly for the first time.

Hitler, himself, did not speak during the ceremonies of the monument dedication. Instead he listened to Admiral Raeder, Vice Admiral Wolf, and Admiral von Prother, who was chief of staff during the Jutland fight. The latter two, both veterans of that fight, paid tribute to the English as well as the German heroes of the engagement.

Thousands of former sailors from all parts of Germany participated in the ceremonies. There were also assembled former colonial soldiers, dressed in their khaki uniforms. The presence of these colonials constantly is assuming greater importance in German gatherings.

Serious Labor Troubles in Many States

FACTORIES and farms in 15 states, in all parts of the Union, were affected by labor troubles which intermediaries were trying in vain to settle. Leaders of organized labor claimed that from 30,000 to 45,000 strikers already were out, but employers challenged the union claims that the strikes were effective.

Workers in six plants of Remington Rand, Inc., were out on strike after union leaders ordered a walkout at Syracuse, N. Y. They said 6,000 workers in the company's New York, Ohio and Connecticut plants were involved. Company officials asserted there were 4,200 affected.

Six thousand barbers in lower Manhattan, New York, were ordered to join 3,000 others in a strike which had spread over a wide area.

Don't Waste Pity on Yourself

Make up your mind that you will have more or less trouble as you journey through this world. You will meet with many disappointments. People whom you trusted may turn out to be "bad actors." If they are, drop them from your acquaintanceship.

But don't under any circumstances begin to believe that you are misused, that there are conspiracies against you, or that you are not getting a "square deal."

Sometimes you won't get a "square deal."

That may be no fault of yours.

But don't worry about it. Drop the acquaintanceship of people who have proved themselves to be mean and tricky, and choose friends that you can trust.

There are plenty of these.

• • •

Don't think for a moment that everybody is trying to get the best of you, that your boss is "exploiting" you, or that you haven't any chance to get ahead.

Your chances of getting ahead will be just about what you deserve.

Today you, like everybody else, have plenty of opportunity to educate yourself.

But to do that it will be necessary to work, and to work hard.

You will find people who will seek to crowd you out and get ahead of you.

You will come into contact with unscrupulous "office politicians."

But that kind of people always work themselves out of jobs before long, for they are so busy with their little venomous plans that they will have no time to win any sort of success.

Don't work on the principle that this is an ideal world, and that everybody gets an even break.

It is not that kind of a world. But its sordidness and selfishness are overrated.

• • •

Work out your own plans, and stick to them.

Pay no more attention to a rascally office mate who is trying to "tunnel" you out of a job than you would to a tree root that tripped you up when you were taking an afternoon walk.

Be helpful and considerate to other people.

If they repay you with backbiting, drop them, and find people who are a better sort.

Enough of these exist in your neck of the woods to help make life very pleasant for you.

Take things as you find them. Use them for your own good. Take care of your health and your disposition.

Bleak Shetland Islands Are Important Fishing Centers

The Shetlands, noted chiefly for their ponies and handknitted shawls, are also known to the rest of Britain as important fishing centers. Thousands of tons of herring, besides large cargoes of codfish, haddock, and whale oil, are exported annually.

There are more than 100 islands in the group, but only about a third of them are inhabited. Most of them are rather bleak and barren. They lie 110 miles north of Scotland and less than twice that distance from the coast of Norway.

Silver Policy

Washington.—A great many persons were mystified a few weeks ago by the treasury announcement that it had entered into an agreement to buy Chinese silver. On the surface, it appeared to be an action by the American government that was wholly a part of its domestic silver policy—a policy that thus far has resulted in no economic benefits at all but has cost American taxpayers rather dearly. Beneath the surface, however, the Chinese silver purchase agreement is one of the most significant moves yet to be made in our foreign policies. I believe it has potential consequences as great or greater than any foreign relations pronouncement to come from the Washington government since World war controversies were liquidated.

To understand the importance of the silver purchase agreement with China, one must examine international relationships over a wide scope. They involve, first and most important of all, the steady inroad made by the Japanese into the Chinese political and economic structure. They embrace, as well, relations of Soviet Russia with China and Japan, and the whole Far Eastern situation for that matter, and the continued efforts of the British to obtain for their nationals additional or restored spheres of influence in China.

Lastly, these international relationships involve, indeed, directly affect, the open door policy respecting Chinese trade. The United States has consistently maintained that China must be open to world trade and in this attitude our nation has had support of the British and some other white nations. On the other hand, the Japanese, while adhering to the open door policy on the surface, have consistently attempted to undermine it directly or by use of the military.

Before the World war it used to be said in China that the international competition there took the form of diplomacy operated through banks and railways. Now, we see the additions of currencies and tariffs to the methods used by the diplomats. The United States is using the currency method—a method attempted by the British without success two years ago—and through this influence, this nation is seeking to expand its trade with China. The Japanese are employing the tariffs to protect their own interests in China and to keep the British and the Americans on the outside.

So, for the first time since 1898, the battle among the nations for the rich lure of China trade is on an economic basis of competition and, it must be said, Japan is in the lead. The Japanese are ahead in this economic warfare chiefly because of their proximity to the territory which is so rich in potential trade.

• • •

Japan Will Oppose

A year or more ago, the British sent Sir Frederick Leith-Ross of the British treasury to Shanghai to aid the Chinese ministry of finance in the establishment of a currency system. It was not announced, of course, but the real purpose of Sir Frederick's visit was to stabilize Chinese money and link it to the British pound sterling. Diplomats watched the maneuver with great interest because it was expected that Japan's control in the North China provinces would be loosened through British currency influence. But it failed to work that way. The North China provinces simply were separated further from China proper and the Japanese tightened their grip.

Now, the Americans have tried something of the same scheme. They worked it out on the basis of silver purchase from China but they prescribed that as the American treasury buys Chinese silver, the dollars paid therefor will be deposited in a branch of the Bank of China which will be established in New York. It will result in easy transfers of money where American exporters ship to China.

No one can tell what the consequences will be. In the first instance, Japan can be expected to exert every power her nationals have to thwart the effect of the program. In the next instance, the British are not going to be enthusiastic about the arrangements because the competition between British and American traders has been increasingly sharper since the World war.

• • •

Wily Japanese

There is still the further circumstance of Japan's smuggling into China. Having had control of the Chinese tariffs, the wily Japanese proceeded to enforce tariff duties rigidly against everyone except themselves. Stories coming out of North China through diplomatic channels as well as from commercial interests tell of vast smuggling operations by the Japanese. In other words, the Japanese have proceeded to find scores of landing places on Chinese soil where they neglected to place customs houses. The net result is, of course, that the Chinese are being supplied with Japanese goods without the payment of a tariff whereas all other imports from foreign shores must carry the tariff load.

It seems, then, that while we cannot know at this time whether the Japanese will attempt further military movements in North China, it certainly can be said unequivocally that the open door for China foreign trade is at stake in this conflict. Most authorities on foreign affairs with whom I have talked tell me that there is little hope to prevent Japanese political supremacy in China. They cannot move northward because in that direction they butt their heads against the Soviet Russian frontier. The Soviet is armed to the teeth on the border of Manchukuo, but to the south and in the area known as North China, no present method appears for curtailing Japanese power.

Thus, history appears to be repeating itself. The battle for concession that took place in 1898 seems about to be revived and undoubtedly the climax to this conflict has been hastened by the American agreement to acquire Chinese silver.

Few authorities are willing to venture a prediction as to where this new policy, promulgated by President Roosevelt, will lead us. Some insist that it is in accordance with the attitude the United States has held for nearly forty years insofar as Chinese relations are concerned. Others claim that, since Japan has grown to such importance as a world power, the silver agreement may eventually lead us further into the Far Eastern controversy, so far, indeed, that the questions later to arise may involve national honor—and national honor ofttimes is a prelude to war.

Japs Invade Philippines

While we are looking over Japanese activities in the Far East, we ought not to forget that only a year ago, our congress, under a political lash and the pressure of selfish interests, voted the Filipinos their independence. Of course, the Philippine islands are still under our protection and will be so for several years, but it is most interesting to know that already the Japanese have set about the colonization of portions of the Philippine islands.

Through the last 20 years, American officials stationed in Manila have kept a watchful eye open to detect any signs of Japanese encroachments. It was not military movements by the Japanese that were feared. It was their well-known capacity for creeping under the edge of the tent and suddenly developing into an economic power.

Official reports now are reaching Washington which indicate amazingly rapid encroachment by the Japanese upon affairs of the islands. One official document shows that Japanese colonists have virtually swallowed up one large Philippine valley. By devious ways, legal and illegal, Japanese farmers have filtered through and have obtained all of the land that is tillable in the Dava valley.

Philippine laws, sponsored by Americans before independence was voted, have been designed to check Japanese colonization and the battle against this has gone on unremittingly since the days of the World war when the Tokyo government first exhibited definite ability to expand its spheres of influence through colonization methods. It should be said, however, that the American officials have been somewhat lax in enforcement of the anti-Japanese laws and the result has been that small colonies of Japanese were planted in various parts of the islands.

Now, it is shown that these colonies have developed into great numerical and economic strength. They seem to have unlimited credit from somewhere for their operations and in the Dava valley, for example, they actually control the price of hemp which is the main agricultural product of that section.

The Japanese are operating in another fashion in the Philippines. It is a well established fact that when legislation is being considered by the Philippine legislative body, it is confronted with a powerful lobby if it is inimical to Japanese interests. Existence of this lobby is known and recognized and many of the Japanese representatives are fearful of consequences to their political careers if they go contrary to the lobby's position.

Such penetration as this into the Philippine economic structure may not be as serious from a world standpoint as the Japanese penetration of North China. Yet, it seems to me that the American government cannot ignore the activity. It may be that Japan has no thought of eventual military and political supremacy over the Filipinos but the surface indications at this time are those that have always preceded political and military subjugation of territories and possessions.

It will be recalled, as well, that just such a condition or circumstance as we now see was among the fears expressed by those representatives and senators in our congress who opposed Philippine independence. The opponents of the independence bill in congress dared not openly assert that Japan would be a menace to the island independence. To have done so would have meant international complications.

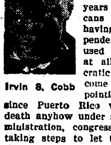
what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

A Political Bystander.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—If I were a Republican orator, I'd say the Democrats wouldn't need a keynoter at their convention when a hog-caller would be more suitable. If, on the other hand, I were a Democratic silver-tongue, I'd say the Republicans needed no campaign committee, whereas a set of pallbearers would be highly appropriate.

As a Republican spellbinder, I'd proclaim we were giving Puerto Rico four years in which gradually to cut loose from us, because, should the Democratic outfit win in November, by the end of those four years the Puerto Ricans will be used to having some independence and we'll be used to having none at all. As a Democratic champion, I'd come right back by pointing out that, since Puerto Rico would starve to death anyhow under a Republican administration, congress mercifully was taking steps to let the people down there get accustomed, by degrees, to the starvation process.



Irvin S. Cobb

As an innocent bystander, though, about all I can say is that, once the nominations have been made, it's a safe prediction that this summer will be fair and warmer.

Meandering Revenue Program.

THE members of the senate finance committee—poor things!—seem to be going forward with the new revenue program the same way a land crab makes headway—by traveling backward. At last accounts they were so snarled up in figures and language that any minute the rescue party was expected to rush in with bush-hooks and chop them loose.

However, out of the epileptic seizure into which these unfortunate patriots have been enmeshed, one concrete fact has emerged. There will be a slight exemption of dues on the profits of corporations making less than $15,000 a year. This will be a great boon for trunk stores down by the depot, brokerage firms handling second-hand railroad tunnels and dealers in Brazilian butterflies.

New Socialist Argument

THE trouble with being a socialist is that, no matter what you start to debate, you always wind up on the Tom Mooney case. Or at least, such was the situation until recently. Now, for any socialistic argument on any subject from German measles to the Great Wall of China, there is a new climax.

The tenants of a Bronx apartment house, mostly radicals, held a meting, and, in accordance with the best radical traditions, drew up resolutions demanding that the management do this and that. Having read the fiery protest, the superintendent addressed the gathering:

"Now aboudt not ledding nobody hang out vashing in the hallways—that's reasonable. I start beginning that reform right away.

"Und as to keeping garbages off the front fire escape—vell, vy nodt?

"But, say, vot do you suckers uxpect me do aboudt the Scottsboro boys?"

Sauce for the Goose.

WHEN a bricklayer feels upset and licks his wife that's temper and he gets $30 or 30 days. But when a flicker star goes on a similar tantrum and wrecks an expensive set, that's artistic temperament and the studio gives her some silver fox furs to calm her nerves.

Thus it goes. If a couple in, say, Peoria, break up, why, then, a couple in Peoria have broken up. But if the same thing occurs in Hollywood, it invariably is featured as a "nuptial rift."

A lad in Kansas takes his girl to Ye Olde New Era eatery for dinner, and what with the blue plate specials and the tip, the transaction amounts to $1.80, but otherwise creates no special excitement either locally or throughout the nation. Let the same thing happen to a couple of the least conspicuous of the movie colony, and 20 columnists fight their way to the wire to scatter the thrilling tidings.

Choosing a New "Buddha."

FROM the forbidden kingdom of Tibet—although goodness knows they never had any trouble keeping me out—comes word that after a two years' search a new "living Buddha" has been discovered. However, we already have our own grand lammer, the name being Joe Louis.

The news from Lhasa should give encouragement to the poor unhappy congressional committeemen who are prominently connected with the Townsend plan who'll condescend to talk to them.

You may quarrel with the Townsendites' bookkeeping, with their way of handling the contributed dimes of thousands of trusting oldsters, with their failure to explain where they're going to get the billions to pay those gaudy pensions or how the provisions of the distribution are to be enforced, but at least the leaders are too proud to endanger their social positions by being caught chit-chatting with a lot of congressmen.

BILLY MINK FINDS SOME QUEER FENCES

When something new and strange you find,
Watch out! To danger be not blind.

THE trouble with a great many people is that they are heedless. When they find something new and strange they forget everything but their curiosity. Because of this they walk right straight into trouble. It happens over and over again.

But Billy Mink isn't this kind of a person. My, my, I should say not! He never has been. If he had he would have lost that beautiful brown coat of his long ago, and there would be no Billy Mink. Billy has his share of curiosity, but with it he possesses a great big bump of suspicion. When he finds anything new and strange he wants to learn all about it. But right away he is suspicious of it.

When Billy Came to This Place He Discovered Something Queer.

After he had discovered the trap set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the Laughing Brook and had fooled the trapper by getting the fish the trapper had placed in that hole, Billy went on up the Laughing Brook to see what else he could discover. Not very far above that place there was a steep bank on each side of the Laughing Brook. Along the foot of each bank was a narrow strip of level ground between the bank and the water. You see, at this season of the year the water in the Laughing Brook was low.

When Billy came to this place he discovered something queer. It was a little fence. It ran from the foot of the bank straight out into the Laughing Brook to where the water became deep. Midway in this little fence was a gateway just big enough to slip through comfortably. Billy looked across to the other side of the Laughing Brook. Over there was another little fence just like this one, and that little fence had an opening in it.

"Huh!" said Billy. "Huh! Those fences are something new. They were not here when I came down the Laughing Brook yesterday. I wonder what they are for. If it were not for those two little openings I would have to either climb the bank or swim around the ends of those fences, and that would be bothersome. I can go through that little opening there as easy as rolling off a log, but I'm not going to do it. No, sir, I'm not going to do it. There is something wrong about those fences. They look to me as if they had been built just to make me go through one of those little gateways. If that's the case, I'm not going to do it."

So Billy plunged into the Laughing Brook and swam out in the deep water around the end of the little fence. Then very carefully he approached the little opening from that side. The more he looked at it, the less he liked it. Right in the middle of that little opening were some wet dead leaves. "Ha, ha!" said Billy. "Another trap!"

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SECRETS OF GOOD FROSTINGS

THE secret of good frostings and fillings for cakes is no secret at all—just use good material, a little care and a good recipe; here are a few:

Boiled Frosting.

Boil together two cups of sugar, two tablespoons of light corn sirup and one-half cup of water until the sirup spins a thread. Pour it very slowly over two stiffly beaten egg whites, flavor with one teaspoon of flavoring and beat until thick enough to spread well. To vary the recipe, add chopped nuts, raisins, figs or dates. Also coconut of various colors may be used to dust the top and sides.

Fudge Frosting.

Cut fine two squares of chocolate and combine with two cups of sugar, one-half cup of milk and one-fourth cup of dark corn sirup. Cook until it forms a very soft ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the fire, set the pan in cold water and cool, then flavor and beat until thick enough to spread on the cake. For those who prefer maple flavoring use either maple sugar or the maple flavor instead of the chocolate.

Tropical Filling.

Put one-fourth cup of sugar, one teaspoon of cornstarch and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt into a double boiler; when well blended add a half cup of sliced orange peel, one-half cup of butter and one egg yolk; cook until smooth and thick. Remove from the heat, add a teaspoon of lemon juice and spread on the layers of the cake.

THE MYSTERIOUS BALANCE

THE items required for this trick are four match boxes, all of similar make. With them the magician performs what appears to be a feat of jugglery.

Carefully setting the match boxes end on end, he holds them upright between his hands. When he takes his upper hand away his lower hand holds the match boxes balanced. Though he performs several maneuvers with the stack, the match boxes do not fall.

The trick depends upon an unsuspected secret. While arranging the stack the magician pushes down the drawer of the top box. Each drawer in the stack locks with the box below. This makes the balance quite simple. The boxes will not come apart until the magician removes them one by one.

ONCE IN A WHILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONCE in awhile we just remember
April and May, not just December.
Once in awhile we quite forget
All of the hurt the heart has met.
Once in awhile some hour or duty
Makes it again a world of beauty.
Once in awhile our minds recall
Joy, and nothing much else at all.

Once in awhile we cease our fretting;
Nothing has changed, we're just forgetting.
Once in awhile if that be true,
Isn't it always the thing to do?
Once in awhile we're done with sorrow,
But if today, why not tomorrow?
Why can't we whistle, can't we smile,
All of the time, if once in awhile?

HEREDITY IDEA IS REFUTED BY TWINS

Professor Studies 120 Pairs in 10-Year Project.

Chicago.—Twins may look as much alike as two peas in a pod, but unless they've been reared in the same environment the chances are the similarity will end with their physical characteristics, Dr. H. H. Newman, University of Chicago biologist, has concluded.

He based his opinions on the results of a ten-year study, in which he observed 120 pairs of twins, scattered throughout the United States. The importance of environment and heredity was studied in each case.

"While our data showed us many surprising and conflicting things," Doctor Newman said, "we are able to say that environment has the most effect on temperament and some on intelligence. It has the least effect on physical characteristics.

Heredity Is Discounted.

"Heredity accounts for only about 80 per cent of the temperamental and emotional aspects of our twins, we discovered through application of standard tests of 20 pairs of identical twins, whose heredity is, of course, identical, and who were separated in infancy and reared apart."

Many differences in twins, Doctor Newman and his associates found, were not consistent with differences in social environment. For instance, he said:

"Two of our boys, Tom and Dick, were alike in many outward respects. But Tom, who had been adopted by a poor family whose moral standards were not high, was manly, independent and pleasingly aggressive.

"His brother, who had lived for 12 years with the family of a wealthy physician, had not developed these pleasing characteristics. Of course these differences may even out in time."

In the case of Edith and Helen, identical twins who are now twenty-seven, Edith, who was reared on a farm, is boyish, athletic and aggressive, said Doctor Newman.

Helen, who had a softer, urban life, is lady-like, to an exaggerated degree, teaches music and dislikes athletics. She has a slightly higher intelligence quotient than her sister. This pair showed the widest differences in every way, Doctor Newman said.

Education Greatest Factor.

"Differences in identical twins," Doctor Newman said, "seem to be about 50 per cent due to education, 15 per cent to social environment, 10 per cent to health, and the rest to causes we cannot classify."

Mental differences of 11 years were found in the case of twins who, although endowed with the same mental capacities, had had different educational advantages.

"The case of Fred and Ed was our most celebrated one," Doctor Newman related. "It was almost like a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. These boys had been adopted from an orphanage when they were infants by families in widely separated parts of the country.

"But both had become electricians. They were married the same year; each had a boy child and each had a fox terrier named Trixie. Both worked for the Bell Telephone Co. Fred so often was mistaken for Ed and vice-versa by employees shifted throughout the organization that each began an investigation which brought them together."

Readers of Esperanto Estimated at 1,000,000

Madison, Wis.—Two small printing presses, sandwiched between a desk and shelves bearing hundreds of books and pamphlets in Esperanto here, are the source of a bi-monthly magazine, Scienca Gazeto, published in this universal language.

The same room also is home of Karl Froding, the magazine's editor and publisher. A card on his door reads "The American Esperanto Institute."

One million persons in the world are adept readers of Esperanto, Froding estimates, and 10,000,000 more have some understanding of it.

Recognizing that it still is "too early to expect anything," Froding is working toward the day when he believes Esperanto will remove the barriers of national languages.

Heirs to $2,500,000 Are Sought in Vain

London.—The county courts of England are waiting and eager to give away $2,500,000 but they cannot find anyone to take it.

For a year courts all over the country have been trying to find the rightful owner of hundreds of thousands of dollars which have remained unclaimed in their possession for nearly a century. The money is made up of sums paid under the trustees relief act, equity cases, and nonclaimed dividends under administrative cases. The amounts range from a few dollars to thousands.

Before the county courts act of 1934 was passed this money remained in the court's custody indefinitely. Now under the new act, after a year's notice, all money paid into court more than 15 years ago is to be handed over to the national debt commissioners.

Dangerous Hill When Wet

By ALBERT P. TERHUNE

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

BECAUSE Lalage knew so little of business and because she knew so much about Billy Doorn's utter perfection in everything, she bade Billy go straight to the boss and demand a raise of pay.

Because Billy Doorn was in that dazedly drunken first stage of a first engagement which makes a youth reverently certain that his sweetheart has all the occult wisdom of a Sybil and all the mystic intuition which her sex claims for itself, he obeyed her command.

There was a slip-up somewhere. Both of them felt that, but neither of them could figure where it was. Both of them had read enough fiction to know that a loving woman is far wiser than a mere man. Also that men owe their most shining successes in life to following the uncannily wise advice of such women.

Yet Billy had followed not only Lalage's advice but her Napoleonic mandate. And here he was out of a job.

Varick Cressel, Billy's erstwhile business overlord, was a casual acquaintance of Lalage's parents, and thus of her own. Also, Cressel walked past her home every morning on his way to the office.

Lalage lay awake until sunrise. Then she crept out of the house and to the garage and set off downhill in her runabout toward the business section of the little city. Something she had read in last evening's paper had dribbled into her mind during her long waking hours, and had given her a fantastic idea.

Down the long slope of the street she drove, coming to a halt at the intersection of one of the many short cross-streets that led toward the river. From the end of each of these block-long cross-streets there was a sheer drop of anywhere from fifty to seventy feet, to the river below. Wherefore each street's river end was barred by a stout grill, from curb to curb.

A heavy motor-truck had turned into one of the streets the day before. It's brakes had gone bad. It had smashed against the rotting grill at full speed and plunged far down into the river.

As Lalage halted her runabout and gazed down the hundred-yard space which separated her home street from the drop, she saw a night shift of men at work repairing the damage.

Two hours later, Varick Cressel set forth from home on his daily trudge to the office. A scud of rain was beginning to fall. He turned up his collar.

"Good morning, Mr. Cressel!" hailed Lalage. "I'm going downtown. Don't you want a lift?"

Wondrous dainty and appealing she was, as she leaned far out of the runabout's doorway. Cressel clambered aboard the car beside her, gratefully, and with much appreciation; yet aware of a hope that she had not yet heard of her fiance's discharge from his office. Lalage glanced at the folded newspaper in Cressel's hand, as the runabout got into motion.

"Wasn't it horrible—that accident at the end of Prosser terrace?" she asked.

"Yes," he made answer. "It was. Disgrace to the city that such a rusty old fence should have been left there so long."

"And wasn't it a million times terribler," went on Lalage, softly pressing the accelerator, "about Billy Doorn losing his job with you? I say it was more terrible, because the truck-driver jumped in time and wasn't hurt. But Billy jumped into the trouble himself—because I pushed him into it. And now he's out of work and—"

"If you don't mind," said Cressel, stiffly, "I think I will get out. I don't care to discuss my business dealings with—"

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" lamented the girl. "But I'm afraid I can't stop and let you out. You see, I seem to have lost control of both brakes. They won't work. I—I have a feeling that when we get to Prosser terrace—"

"Don't be absurd!" snapped the bewildered man. "You haven't even touched the brakes. I—"

"And I seem to have forgotten how to," she lamented, as the runabout whizzed faster. "In fact, Mr. Cressel, the only thing that seems likely to bring back my memory is your solemn promise that Billy shall have his job back. You see, it's my fault. I tried to be like the wise girls in stories, and to run his work for him. I taught him a speech to make to you and got him to make it. It was my fault. Now I've got to undo what I've done. It's up to you, Mr. Cressel. So, if you won't let him come back to work—"

"Look out, there!" shouted Cressel. "You almost hit those people. Slow down or—"

"Yes!" sweetly assented Lelage. "Prosser terrace is only two blocks ahead. But—"

"Tell the young idiot to come back to work this morning!" snarled Cressel.

"Oh, how sublimely dear of you!" cooed Lalage. "See, just the very prospect of it makes the brake work again. That's a solemn promise? Because the story would sound so funny if I told it! See, we're safely past Prosser terrace. As soon as I leave you at your office I'll telephone Billy."

"Never mind about phoning to young Doorn to come back, Miss Goss," Cressel exhorted his secretary, ten minutes later. "Someone else is doing it for me. I thought the boy needed a lesson. That's why I made believe to let him go—useful as he was. But it was somebody else who needed the lesson. I think she got it. Women are queer, Miss Goss. Take dictation, please."

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested.

"Did you ever see Kelly?"

"No."

"He was enormous. Must have been six-feet-two in his stockings. I'm five-feet-five in mine. I'd've had to stand on a chair to hit him on top of the head."

"Unless he was sitting in one."

"The body wasn't anywhere near a chair. It was up against the door to the hall. The paper says so. The Filipino got in through the dining room. I got out through the hall door. He saw me. How did I do that, if Kelly was lying against it?"

"I don't know."

"Two more things: The lights were burning full tilt when I left. I could see Kelly's shadow on the blinds as I passed the house on my way home. Were they still burning when the butler came in the next morning! And, if not, who turned 'em out?"

"What's the other item?"

"The other item's the crux of the whole business," Jack answered. "Mike rushed me out because the phone rang, and the fellow that rang it was coming over to talk to him. Did he come? If not, why not? And, if that fellow did come, isn't it likely that he's the guy that killed Kelly?"

CHAPTER IV

It was long after one o'clock when they walked out of the Tombs.

She was all in now. Barry splurged on a taxi to take her "home" to the dingy boarding house where the disowned Ridders lived, in the upper Forties. In spite of her protests, Barry kept his word as to giving her most of that hundred and fifty. "It isn't mine," he declared.

"We'll eat together Monday, after I've talked to Winslow. I'll be around about six o'clock."

It was two now—a warmish Saturday afternoon. Nearly forty-eight hours before he could hope to find the attorney. Any inexpensive hotel would do. He registered at one a few blocks from Peggy's. "Barry Gilbert," he wrote.

From his new residence, Barry went to the Astor, and cabled Mrs. Ridder. The message read:

'Making good stop water-wagon and on track of a job stop friend of mine met in Florida locked up for murder didn't commit stop can you arrange credit here up to two thousand dollars stop won't use unless necessary for friend and will return every penny stop wire Peter Winslow lawyer for confirmation if desired stop this is my big chance to do something worth while stop writing details all's well don't hurry back love. John."

"I'll need that two thousand quick," Barry thought. "Winslow'll want a retainer, and there'll be a lot of other things." Barry wondered what to do with his forty-eight hours. "I'll stroll down to Kelly's place," he decided, "and give it the once-over."

From Sixth avenue, he turned into 16th street, and stopped before what the tabloids were calling "the scene of the murder." It was an old-fashioned red-brick house, with a bay window, and a heavy front door. A policeman stood guard, and a group of the curious loitered as near as they dared.

Remarkable; Barry thought, how people could stand staring at anything connected with a tragedy.

There was another little group at the corner, where workmen were putting in a new traffic light standard. Broken off short, its predecessor lay on the pavement. Having nothing better to do, Barry asked, "What's the excitement?"

"Taxi smash."

"When?"

"Just before two o'clock yesterday morning. Killed a woman. Crushed her right up against that post. Broke it off short. Don't seem possible."

No wonder the Judge was "upset."

Curious, Barry thought, these two violent deaths within a few yards and a few hours of each other. Curious, too, that the Judge's stroll should have brought him so near the house in which Kelly lay murdered, but no more remarkable than the series of events that had involved Barry in the whole affair. "Life's full of coincidences," Barry mused. "It's only in fiction that people pay much attention to 'em. Winslow said the Judge went for a walk, and that's the simplest explanation of the whole matter.

He was at the attorney's office before ten o'clock on Monday morning. He was ushered into the pleasantly furnished corner room that was Peter's. The lawyer rose, as Barry entered, and came forward, one hand outstretched, and the other holding a newspaper. "The early bird, eh?"

"I'm not exactly looking for worms," Barry replied. "I want that position we were talking about, if I can get it, but, just now, I'm a lot more interested in this Kelly murder. You've read about that, I suppose."

Peter nodded.

"I saw the headlines after you left the Hambidges on Friday," he said. "I didn't bother about it much then. But, this morning, I found Saturday's Herald Tribune on my desk. And, of course, I'm always interested in murders."

"I know the boy who's accused of this crime," Barry said.

"You do? That's exciting. Tell me about it."

Barry did, omitting only the detail of Ridder's identity.

"I met them in Florida," he related. "Rogers worked in a hotel there. I liked the girl even then. She'd been putting up such a game fight to make a man of her husband, and was succeeding so wonderfully. I suppose I'm the only friend they've got around here, and that's why she came to me."

Winslow listened sympathetically.

"That sort of thing always gets me," he observed. "A woman tied up to some man who's not worthy of her, and in love with him."

"This boy's not so bad," Barry argued. "And it's a lead-pipe cinch that he didn't kill Kelly."

"Think so."

"Dead sure."

"All right. Make me sure."

Barry tried.

"There was someone else coming when Jack left," he concluded. "If he came, he either found Kelly dead, in which case he'd've given the alarm, or he found Kelly alive, in which case, of course, Jack didn't kill him."

"Very ingenious," Peter remarked. "But what makes you think someone else was coming?"

"That's why Kelly fired Jack out."

"Who says so?"

"Jack—and Peggy."

"Not very conclusive," Peter objected.

"Who do you think did it?"

"I'm not concerned as to who did it," Peter declared. "Only as to who didn't."

"Jack didn't. You'd know that if you looked at him."

"I feel sorry for the girl. I'll go down to see Rogers. Somebody ought to've gone—long ago—to file an appearance. There shouldn't have been any preliminary hearings without proper representation."

"You'll take the case, then?"

"I suppose so. Now, how about that job I thought we might land at my brother's?"

"I certainly need it."

"Let's see if he's in."

"Get Jamison Winslow," he instructed the operator.

In a few minutes the phone rang.

"That you, Jimmy?" Peter said into it. "You've heard of John Clarke Ridder, haven't you? Well, his son's in here, and wants work. How about it? Got anything over there?"

The instrument made raucous noises.

"All right," Peter continued, at last. "I'll send him around, and you talk to him.

"Chrysler building," he informed Barry, "and he's waiting for you."

"I don't know how to thank you."

"What for?"

"Mainly for helping two people in a lot of trouble."

Peter smiled once more.

"That inside-job theory sticks to my mind," Barry remarked. "Is there a Mrs. Mike Kelly?"

Peter laughed outright.

"You're determined to be Sherlock Holmes, aren't you?" he asked. "All right. There is a Mrs. Mike Kelly. I'd just finished reading about her. She sued for divorce recently and withdrew the case. Do you think that might indicate that she killed her husband?"

"Cherchez la femme, you know."

Peter laughed again.

"Search for the woman," he translated. "But, then, there appear to have been a good many women in Kelly's life. We mustn't jump at conclusions."

"No," Barry admitted. "No, I suppose not.

"All the same," he thought, the other side of the door, "it's pretty evident that a woman who sues for divorce is a little bit anxious to get rid of her husband."

But there was nothing doing at Jamison Winslow's.

"I'm sorry," he said, "but we're laying off men every day now. Why aren't you on your father's newspaper?"

"My father and I haven't been very friendly."

"So I've heard. But I've got an idea. That's what I wanted to talk to you about."

It was quite a simple idea.

"We place thousands of dollars worth of advertising with The Globe. And I know the city editor pretty well. His name's Harwood. If I gave you a letter to Ernie, and he gave you a job, and you made good while the boss is in Europe, wouldn't that square things when he got back?"

Barry grinned.

"It might," he said, "and then again it might not."

"What I heard," Jamison Winslow went on, "was that your father wanted you in his business. If that's true, he'd certainly be pleased at your going in."

"I'd like to succeed on my own."

"Well, why not? We don't have to tell Harwood who you are. Not in the beginning, anyway."

"That is an idea," Barry agreed. "Since the row, I've been calling myself Barry Gilbert."

"Not a bad pen name," Jamison Winslow declared. "All right; we'll stick to it. I've a hunch that you'd make a good newspaper man."

"That's what your brother said."

Ten minutes later, Barry Gilbert—himself again, so to speak—was on his way to The Globe.

The Globe occupied a new and imposing building in Thirty-ninth street. Asking for Mr. Harwood, Barry found himself in the city room. Men in their shirt sleeves sat at desks, smoking and pounding on typewriters, and most of the people who had rushed in and out of the elevators rushed in and out of the double doors. Harwood's office proved to be a small and comparatively quiet cubby-hole just off the concourse.

He had always been a newspaper man. Square cut, not very tall, but with big hands and broad shoulders his hair was as red as Barry's. He had been John Clarke Ridder's city editor when John Clarke was a cub reporter, and he remained John Clarke's city editor still. John Clarke's friend, too, with more real power, and ability, than any other man on The Globe.

Now he glanced at the Winslow letter, and grunted.

"Think you can write, I suppose?"

"Pretty sure I can't."

"Then what're you gonna do on a newspaper?"

"Get news."

Ernie Harwood looked him over.

"How?"

"Well, just now, it happens that I'm a friend of Jay Rogers."

"The fellow that killed Mike Kelly?"

"The fellow they say killed him."

"Yeah?"

Ernie squinted into the bowl of his pipe.

"How long have you known Jimmy Winslow?" he inquired.

"About half an hour. His brother asked him to get me a job."

—"Peter Winslow?"

"Yes."

"Peter Winslow going to defend Rogers?" he snapped.

"Yes."

Ernie reached for a telephone.

"Peter Winslow's defending the Rogers boy," he barked into the instrument. "If it's straight, play it up in the next edition."

To Barry he said, "How did you get Winslow to take the case?"

For the second time, Barry related his story of meeting the Rogers in Florida. From there, he jumped to the visit of Mrs. Rogers, repeating what she had told him, and dilating upon their interview with the boy in the Tombs.

"What did he say?" Harward asked.

"I don't feel at liberty to repeat that until I've spoken to Peter Winslow," Barry answered, "but it's given me two clues that I'd like to follow up."

"All right," Ernie said. "Follow 'em. Your salary's fifty dollars a week. Report straight to me."

"Yes, sir."

"Wait a minute. I'll put you next to somebody who'll introduce you at police headquarters. We've got that angle covered, of course, but you'd better be in touch there. What I want you to do is to follow your own leads. Bring in something."

"Roth, come here!" he called. "I want you to take Mr. Gilbert down to the homicide bureau."

Nothing seemed entirely impossible that bright mid-May morning, as Barry swung into Broadway.

Up to now, he owed everything to his imposture—that first stake, the clothes he wore, Peter Winslow's favor, and all that had followed. They constituted an amazingly fortuitous chain of circumstances. But the chain had lifted him to solid ground. "It's up to me now," Barry said, feeling square with himself, and the world, and strangely gay and self-confident.

"I'm going to start right," he said, "by paying those bills, and giving Peggy the rest of that two hundred. I'm going to figure up my board and room at Southampton, and give her that, too. A fellow like me can't afford to be crooked."

Speed of Sound

The speed with which sound travels through various materials varies greatly. In air, sound waves move 1,087 feet per second. They move through water nearly five times as fast as through air, and through hard dense materials such as steel and glass the sound waves travel from 15 to 20 times as fast as through air.

IT LOOKS more and more likely that Paramount and RKO will merge in the not-so-distant future, which will mean another of those upheavals that take place every so often in the motion picture business. It's rather like shuffling a pack of cards; the same men bob up over and over.

And, curiously enough, some of those men are not too competent. One of the big shots who gets important jobs, over and over, has consistently been a company wrecker. (Incidentally, he's not among the Paramount-RKO assortment!) Yet when one company lets him out, another one takes him on.

Olivia de Havilland

Olivia de Havilland, who has climbed to the top so rapidly since she appeared in "Midsummer Night's Dream," remarked the other day she had tied up her income in a trust fund, allowing herself only $250 a week, (wise girl!) and that, furthermore, she'd spend her spare time between pictures in her home town, Saratoga, Calif., because there's nothing like a small town where you know everybody to deflate your ego.

A girl who'd grown up with her in that same small town declares that Olivia has always been one of the grandest girls alive, an opinion shared by every one who knows that very lovely young actress. And what a break for her that she's to play opposite Robert Montgomery in "The Marriage Clause." Working together they should make a team that movie fans will talk about for a long time to come.

"Show Boat" may be pretty hard on your pocket book, because you're going to want to see it over and over again. Compared with the stage play and the screen version made years ago, it comes out on top. A hardened movie goer who had never liked Helen Morgan, a man who had seen her at night clubs and on the stage, capitulated when he heard her sing "My Bill." Another one said he felt as if he'd never heard "Old Man River" till Paul Robeson sang it this time. And Irene Dunne's dance to "Can't Help Lovin' That Man" is worth the price of admission all by itself.

A new series of historical shorts is under way, and it's about time! Most of us remember what we see on the screen, so this ought to be the best possible method of teaching children history. The first one, "Song of the Nation," dramatizes the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and it's finished. Some of the other subjects are Lincoln's boyhood, the fall of the Alamo, the drawing up of the Declaration of Independence, the Louisiana Purchase and the duel between Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton.

Anna Sten, whose movie career went up like a skyrocket and came down like the rocket's stick, has returned from Europe, where she made a picture. No announcements yet about her making any more over here.

A lot of the movie stars of earlier days will be seen in the picture, "Hollywood Boulevard"; some of them have been slowly coming back to pictures, others have merely wanted to. Leatrice Joy had a test the other day. And one company has been dickering with Theda Bara, but she wants lots and lots of money.

Speaking of old-timers, Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., has just about decided not to make pictures any more; all the talk about "Marco Polo" has come to nothing. He admits that he's been away too long, that picture-making has progressed too rapidly for him.

Fred Astaire

Fred Astaire has finally got things fixed to suit him. From now on he'll make just two pictures a year. And Ginger Rogers (who's had some very smart new sandals named for her, incidentally,) will have a chance to go dramatic in some of the ones she makes without him. She insists that she doesn't want to be nothing but a dancer, and she's right. She should have a chance to show her other talents in acting and to develop them further in pictures.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Harriet Hilliard will travel to California soon to play one of the leads in "Count Pete" . . . Ginger Rogers has written a song—"I Can't Understand Why You Can't Understand Me"; did both words and music . . . Sylvia Sidney's making a picture in England, and being urged to stay and make some more . . . Errol Flynn almost got deported because he forgot to renew his visa . . . Since James Cagney just won't make new pictures, his old ones are bobbing up again, and they're still good . . . Edna May Oliver is having a grand vacation, her first in a long time.

Flag Race Future Shows Few Shifts in Second Guesses

SECOND guessing the season.

DETROIT—The Tigers have been socked hard by injuries. They have lost at least four games which probably could have been won with Hank Greenburg in the lineup. There has been some acrimony between Mickey Cochrane and the baseball writers. But most opponents continue to believe the team will win its third straight pennant.

CHICAGO—Opponents do not esteem the Cubs as highly now as before the start of the season. Although they admit the Philly deal improved the National league titleholders, they whisper that the arms of Lon Warneke and Curt Davis have not been improved by age. The team to date has not shown championship class. But, at least, they should continue better than the White Sox no matter what happens.

YANKEES—One of the most interesting teams of the year. In rival dugouts players say this is the club the Tigers must beat. Also that Joe Di Maggio is by far the best rookie of the year.

BOSTON—Maybe Grove and Ferrell can carry the Red Sox pitching burden all the way to the wire. American league athletes do not think so, and neither do they believe that the club has enough consistent power to make up for occasional sloppy defensive days. Luck and Tony Cuccinello have kept the Bees up so far. Still they seem destined for last place, though.

GIANTS—Another team which might do well to prepare for dire visitations from fate. Players believe that Terry is overworking his pitchers and that only a new starting hurler or a top-notch relief man will save him in August.

ST. LOUIS—The probable National league winners even though they could use another pitcher and better reserves. The American league entry is by no means as bad as the standings indicate. Hornsby believes that one good pitcher might even now lift the Browns to fifth place.

Dodgers Are Hard Luck Club of Major Leagues

Casey Stengel

DODGERS—Definitely lacking in punching power but still the hardest luck club in the majors. With an average amount of breaks might at least be even with the .500 mark instead of far below it. Since the breaks even up fairly well throughout the course of a season, the fans are advised to stick with Casey Stengel a while longer. He has more than enough pitching talent and should be able to make at least one decent deal before June 15.

PITTSBURGH—Needed pitchers before Waite Hoyt went to the hospital and now needs them worse than ever. The Pirates have power and a more aggressive spirit than usual.

CLEVELAND—The Indians seem to have too much moxie for their own good. Because of their careless use of words and spikes, rivals always are aiming at them. Home folks also have weakened on them, but the team continues to haunt the dreams of Joe McCarthy and M. Cochrane.

WASHINGTON—Well managed by Bucky Harris and always dangerous. One pitcher might put them in the first division but there is little chance of getting him.

CINCINNATI—Young and ambitious and may eventually stick in fifth place. In spite of their showing so far few players take the Reds seriously, though.

PHILADELPHIA—The Phillies did well by themselves in the Cubs deal. Although somewhat damaged, Klein possibly is as good an outfielder as Ethan Allen. Kowalik can take his starting turn as well as Davis and may become a valuable sales item within a season or two. Besides—but why speak of gold? Or, indeed, why mention that other baseball auction house which probably still is doing business in the Quaker City for all anybody knows?

• • •

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

Alex Kampouris is beset by the same trouble that afflicts Frenchy Bordagaray. The Reds' second sacker is a good little ballplayer but he doesn't remember well and runs against orders on the bases . . . . Charley Dressen is so skilled at catching signs that most of the rival managers have taken to hiding in dark corners of their dugouts while wigwagging orders to their Athletes . . . . Steve Owen of the pro football Giants keeps busy working for his boss, Bookie Tim Mara, at local tracks during the off season.

LINES from an overcrowded notebook. (Which merely is another way of saying that the Not in the Box Score Dept. is working overtime this week.)

Gents who should know say that the U. S. will be knocked off in the Olympics this year. Not enough money to pay for those who do want to go . . . Joe Medwick uses the largest glove of any major league outfielder. It's almost a mate for the first baseman's mitt Hank Greenberg had to discard . . . After losing $1,600 betting on Jimmy McLarnin, Jimmy Kelly spent two more C's on a dinner celebrating Tony Canzoneri's victory . . . Three of Princeton's best backs may be ineligible for football next fall. Study trouble.

Some of the nation's leading amateur tennis players are reported to have been "sold at a slave market" during the Houston (Texas) invitation event this spring. The story is that they were put on the block and auctioned off to spectators in a gambling pool . . . The late Laverne Fator was the best judge of pace among modern riders. He is ranked with Tod Sloan and Isaac Murphy among the all-time great jockeys in the art of rating a horse along . . . Gene Moore of the Bees is a guess hitter. He stands up there and takes the same cut no matter what is thrown. That means smart pitchers soon will fill his life with sorrow . . . Keep an eye on Peter (no kin) Bradley, the Princeton soph half-miler. There's more than a chance that he'll become another Bill Bonthron.

Stribling Was Toughest Foe for Max Schmeling

Max Schmeling

Max Schmeling says that Young Stribling gave him his toughest fight. Which means that he has something to look forward to on June 18. . . . Arlie Latham, who won fame as a St. Louis Browns third baseman and as a Giant coach under McGraw, played his first game of ball at his home in Lynn, Mass. It was a game of bean bag with the daughter of Lydia Pinkham. . . . Fred De Groof, who still rates as one of the best after 25 years of soccer refereeing, was a Belgium schoolboy internationalist.

The best infield (playing field) in the majors is in Cleveland, ballplayers say. They rate the improved Cincinnati park as the best in the National league . . . Although he is president of one of the country's largest construction companies, Johnny Millar still finds time to be first V. P. of the Metropolitan Soccer league and to render valuable assistance to the Welfare Island loop . . . His friends say that Johnny Gorman, Princeton frosh football coach, turned down a $12,000-a-year offer to be head gridiron man at North Carolina . . . Other Tigers gossip that Bill Lynch, 200-pound sophomore fullback, is a cinch to be a star at Nassau next fall.

In spite of Irish opinion to the contrary, Mickey Cochrane is Scotch . . . Eddie Mayo, newest of the Giants, bought $5 worth of ice cream sodas with the first money he ever received for playing baseball . . . The looks speaks louder than words department may be interested in knowing that Umpire Bill Stewart declares that Bill Terry never has hurled a cuss word at him since he has been calling them in the National league . . . Joanna Vischer, daughter of the polo magazine editor, was a winner at the Cedarhurst Hunts meet the other day, betting only on horses that caught her five-year-old eye in the paddock.

Dizz Smiles at Davis but Has Other Catcher

Dizzy Dean may smile at Virgil Davis but Brusie Ogrodowski still catches him . . . Mrs. Fred Frankhouse wears "lucky" dresses to ball games but the luck doesn't always hold out—the Dodgers being what they are . . . Unless Pirate Pitcher Swift gets into the habit of throwing over to first base occasionally runners will steal him right out of the majors . . . According to Morty Mahoney, the pari-mutuel expert, 25 per cent of the horse-players in Florida each winter come from New England . . . The one point on which Barney Ross and those Australian promoters have not agreed is the referee. If George Blake is picked, Ross will meet Jack Carroll.

Young Al Vanderbilt, who started out in the turf business by betting ten coconuts at a time on his Sagamore farms gee gees, now shoves in C notes . . . Coley Madden, who is back in the Belmont clubhouse after a four-year absence, is noted as one of the best figurers of percentages among the horse players and layers. He learned his mathematics at Harvard . . . Manuel Rodriguez, famous inside right in the days when the Gibraltar A. C. was knocking off all comers, now is secretary of the Brooklyn (soccer) Hispanos . . . In those far-off days when Dan Brouthers was the Babe Ruth of baseball they used to put up small flags to mark the spot where each home run left the park.

Jack Onslow, Bees' coach, says that Berres and Lopez are the best catchers in the National league . . . Promoter Mike Jacobs proved that them as has gets when he visited Schmeling's fight camp the other day. A minimum investment enabled him to hit all the slot machines for all they had.

STORY of MAINE

Making Snow Shoes in Maine.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WITH warmer weather gripping the southland, vacationists feel the appeal of northern climes. Each section of the country has its cool spot. Many easterners are lured to Maine, which is noted not only for its invigorating summer climate but also for its historic background.

The name of Maine may or may not be French; it certainly is not Indian, like Massachusetts or Connecticut. Of the sixteen counties, five recall the mother country, being named for English shires; five others honor American personages of the colonial or Revolutionary periods, and the remaining six retain the Indian names of the rivers within their borders.

As for the other names which have received specific legislative sanction for something over 400 cities, towns, and townships, the larger part are simply descriptive, or repetitions of towns in other New England states. Of the rest, so far as the origin of their names is known, 66 bear Old world names, so that in that delightful tale by Laura E. Richards, "Narcissa, or the Road to Rome," the roadside signpost might have pointed to Vienna, Belgrade, or even China, and kept within the jurisdiction of the County of Kennebec.

Proprietors and first settlers are known to have given their names to 58 towns; governors, generals, and Presidents to 16, 12, and 6 towns, respectively; while Indian names, which so plainly tell their own origin, number only 23.

An interesting touch of idealism was the selection of such distinctive town names as Harmony, Amity, and Hope; Freedom, Liberty, and Unity, these last three being neighbors in Waldo county.

From the beginning the economic life of Maine was founded on fish, fur, and forest. These three furnished powerful incentives for exploration and the chief rewards for settlement.

The fisheries of the Gulf of Maine were even an issue between king and parliament early in the Seventeenth century, when the English fishermen won their fight for free fishing along the Maine coast, despite the monopoly granted by James I in his patent to the council of New England.

Fisheries a Major Industry.

So it came that the earliest sites of permanent settlements were chosen not for mildness of climate, but by reason of proximity to the cold waters where dwelt the fish that could be converted into a profitable export, without license fee being paid to any patentees of the crown.

The fisheries continue a major industry. The value of the state's fishing products as marketed approximates six million dollars, the two largest items being the plebeian herring and the aristocratic lobster.

Along with the ancient business of fishing a place must be given to the popular sport of angling, for which Maine offers unsurpassed inducements, in the lakes and streams and also offshore.

Last year 35,000 fishermen and fisherwomen from outside the state, and nearly five times that number of residents, obtained licenses. The fees received went directly to hatching, planting and protecting a new crop of game fish.

The state maintains 36 fish hatcheries and rearing stations, and from these last year went 17,000,000 trout, togue, and salmon for stocking the brooks, streams, and lakes. Nearly half of these "planted" fish were above legal size, and 10,000 weighed from 3 to 6 pounds each.

The policy of protecting wild life is enforced by a corps of 100 game wardens, who seek to be big brothers to the youth of the state in training them to be good sportsmen. In the severe winter of 1934, airplanes were used to locate deer yards and then cedar trees were cut to feed the starving deer confined there by the deep snow.

Moose are far from being extinct. They can be shot only with a camera; but deer continue plentiful, 18,933 having been killed legally in 1933. More bears are killed in Maine than in any three other states. Grouse, woodcock, and ducks complete the game offering, with pheasants promised as a future attraction.

The Early Explorers.

As early as 1605 Capt. George Waymouth and his companions on the Archangel—many of them world travelers for that day—were deeply stirred by their first views of a Maine river which the captain named St. George's (now St. George).

An exploratory trip inland "toward the great mountains," the Camden hills, convinced them of the "beauty and goodness" of the land, as recorded by Rosier in his True Relation of that "most prosperous voyage." And the author boldly affirmed St. George's "to be the most rich, beautiful, large and secure harboring river that the world affordeth."

A few years later (1614), Capt. John Smith was less attracted by this eastern part of the region he named New England. Yet he saw fit to say of this coast, "Those barren Iles so furnished with good woods, springs, fruits, fish and foule, that it makes me think though the coast be rocky, and thus affrightable, the valleys, plains and interior parts may well (notwithstanding) be very fertile."

So moderate a statement must have been exceeded by other testimony of that day, since only a dozen years later another explorer on the Maine coast, Capt. Christopher Levett, a member of the Council of New England, felt it necessary to "debunk" certain other travelogues, not preserved for the modern reader. In reporting on his voyage of 1623-4, he remarks: "Nor will the Deare come when they are called, or stand still and looke on a man, until he shute him, not knowing a man from a beast, nor the fish leape into the kettle."

And he continues: "But certainly there is fowle, Deare, and Fish enough for the taking if men be diligent," which equally well describes the Maine of 1623 and 1935.

The discovery of this part of the North Atlantic shore is usually credited to John Cabot of Bristol, on his second voyage in 1498.

The honor of making the first detailed contributions to accurate geographic knowledge of Maine must, however, be shared by a Frenchman and an Englishman: Samuel de Champlain and the aforementioned Captain Waymouth.

In 1605 both Champlain and Waymouth were sailing along the Maine coast. So near did they come to meeting that in midsummer Champlain heard from an Indian chief on the Kennebec of the presence of an English ship ten leagues to the eastward, which was undoubtedly Captain Waymouth's Archangel.

The race was on between the French and the English; and the Maine region was destined to be eventful borderland for a century and a half in the contest for control between New England and New France.

Settled by Sieur de Monts.

The first settlement in Maine was made by Sieur de Monts, who in 1603 had obtained from the king of France a trading concession for Acadia, then defined as extending from Cape Breton island to the latitude of Philadelphia. With Chaplain as his lieutenant, De Monts set sail for the New world fully equipped for his colonization venture.

Some three months later, on June 26 1604, a small island in a sheltered river was selected as best adapted for a fortified settlement and trading post. This island was named Saint Croix and was not far above where the river now bearing the same name empties into Passamaquoddy bay. Here, on what is now also known as Dochet island, was erected a group of dwellings in part built of timber brought from France, with a storehouse, dining hall, kitchen, and blacksmith shop. Gardens were laid out, all carefully planned by Champlain.

The site of this earliest but short-lived settlement in Maine, which antedated Jamestown, Quebec, and Plymouth, was not wholly obliterated.

Before the Pilgrims.

In a speech in congress 100 years after statehood was granted to Maine, Representative Robert Luce of Massachusetts, himself Maine born, remarked that Maine might more fittingly be called the older sister of Massachusetts than her daughter. And the records of early settlement and trade well bear out this contention.

On Capt. John Smith's map of New England of 1614, for example, the site which is now York was named Boston, thus locating in Maine, so far as maps go, the first New World Boston—and all this before the Pilgrims even landed!

When the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, not a few Englishmen had already been sojourning on the Maine coast and even had wintered there. The welcome of the Indian sachem Samoset was in the Pilgrims' own tongue, learned from the fishermen on the Maine coast. Indeed, thirteen years before, in 1607, the Popham colonists built a fort in "that northern colony" which mounted 12 pieces of ordnance. They also erected a church and launched a 30-ton vessel—a fine record of English piety and preparedness.

Bob Davis Reveals

Evils Done the Dead by Half-Cocked Writers of History.

WHEN Napoleon remarked, "All history is a lie," he launched a mouthful. The Little Corporal must have sensed what he was to suffer at the hands of his biographers, those ink-stained harpies who marked time against the hour his star fell at St. Helena where, on a frail army cot surrounded by a handful of the faithful, he writhed into the everlasting shadows addressing the mirage of his army. This man of destiny ended his earthly career in a welter of fat, his ankles bulging over patent leather shoes like something spilling into space . . . The jowls of him fell into a soiled collar, open at the throat, disclosing the ivory pulp of a flabby breast housing a heart that for twenty years had set the tempo for victorious cannonading under the banners of France.

Twenty thousand volumes written in every living tongue flowed for more than a hundred years from the impetuous pens of biographers, self-consecrated to lay bare the life of the Corsican-born adventurer who lived to shake the world. From the confusion wrought of countless pens, the fearsome Bonaparte now stalks—half monster; half god, an execrated and a deified personality, mythologized with the accumulating years, and all that is germane to his influence upon the Nineteenth century, is swept into historical disorder.

Biography Written by Ear.

Unfortunate, indeed, that history is not clarified by time. Once an error creeps into the record it remains there forever, modified at intervals but never wholly corrected for the enlightenment of posterity. It is quite the vogue with modern biographers, to take one characteristic of the deceased and upon that rebuild the personality to suit themselves.

Memoirs are equally noxious, not for what they present, but for what they withhold. Most biography is written in the measure of one grand sweet song whistled by an idiot who has no ear for music. Recently in Washington a conscientious attempt was made by a congressman and an artist to contrive a mural decoration that would show just how our colonial statesmen looked when properly garbed in the style of that period; nothing, y'understand, built along quantity production lines or shot with shoddy, but the crackerjack hand-made breeches, buskin and waistcoat of the James Madison, Ben Franklin and Aaron Burr school, showing George Washington in profile and Alexander Hamilton from the front elevation.

Fair enough, and a knockout, so I understood. But has anything been done to clear up some of the exaggerations, inaccuracies and dirty cracks taken at George and Alex by the gentry who adulterate biography with fiction?

Not long ago I picked up a book that dealt in part with that dramatic chapter in the life of Bonnie Prince Charlie, who was rescued from British pursuers in the Isle of Skye by the heroine Flora MacDonald after the battle of Culloden, which rang down the curtain of Charlie's kingly ambitions. To quote:

Story of Royal Romance.

"It seems to have been his (Charlie's) thought that if she (Flora) cared for him that the two might well love; and he gave her every chance to show him favor. The youth of twenty-five and the girl of twenty-four roamed together in the long, tufted grass, or lay in the sunshine and looked out over the sea. But to the last he was either too high or too low for her, according to her own modest thought . . ."

Well, there it is, offered as history. Last year I spent a month in the Isle of Skye, snooping into that affair, variously distorted by writers totally ignorant of the truth. The facts are these: Following Culloden, Bonnie Charlie took it on the run with a £30,000 reward on his curly head. Loyal Highlanders, a mere handful, escorted him through the rain-swept barren hills, keeping him concealed under cover of night. Flora, true blue, unimpeachable and courageous, was selected by Charlie's escort to get the prince out of his difficulties. She agreed to take the risk and set about her arrangements to get him to a point of safety disguised as her maid.

Myth Is Debunked.

After ten days of breath-taking adventure, Flora, bossing the entire job, succeeded in her mission, and on the night of July 1, 1746, in the presence of Highland gentlemen, one of them a relative of Flora, the Bonnie Prince bade her a respectable unemotional good-by in Room 5 of Royal hotel at Portree, climbed out of the window and escaped in the boat that her efforts had provided. The actual time consumed in the plot for his flight was ten days, during five of which Flora never set eyes upon the prince. During the five remaining days she saw him three times, always in the company of his Highland henchmen. Rain and cold weather prevailed. Not once was the rescuer of the hapless nobleman alone in his society. To be perfectly frank, Charlie on the occasion of his last ten days in Skye was ragged, cold, hungry—and lousy.

All Around the House

For the picnic lunch basket, roll out baking powder biscuit dough about one-quarter-inch thick, cut with biscuit cutter, spread thickly with deviled ham, roll up and bake.

• • •

If table silver is placed in hot soapsuds immediately after being used, and dried, with a soft, clean cloth, much of the work of polishing will be saved.

• • •

Purchase seldom used spices in small packages, as it is more economical since spices lose some of their flavor when exposed to the air.

• • •

To prevent lilac suckers growing up around your lilac bush, cut a circular piece of linoleum about two feet wide, cut hole in middle for bush, slit linoleum from edge to center hole and place around bush.

• • •

To make radish roses, trim down to an inch of the stem. Cut off root, then cut down from the tip so that the red part of radish stands out like petals. Put in ice water for an hour or two and petals will curl up.

• • •

Powdered borax added to the water when washing fine white flannel, helps to keep them soft.

• • •

Heat a lemon thoroughly before squeezing and you will obtain nearly double the quantity of juice.

• • •

A teaspoonful of baking powder added to potatoes while they are being mashed, will make them light and fluffy.

Most of Warships Sunk at Scapa Flow Salvaged

Nearly all the German ships which were sunk by their crews at Scapa Flow after their surrender to the British have been salvaged and their metal parts disposed of. Some of the steel was used for rails; some went to motor car manufacturers. The steel in the armor plate and the big guns went to tool makers.

Some of it even went back to Germany. Reports from abroad state that nothing was thrown away.

Accidents increase after sundown. What does this mean? It means that we are not slowing down in our driving speed when darkness overtakes us. The lights on the present automobiles, while materially better than the lights on cars years ago do not throw a beam far enough to allow us to see objects at the speed we are traveling.

Three out of every four cars go into the garage at sundown, yet accidents increase after sundown. It means that the minority is causing most of the accidents simply because they are not paying attention to the road, driving at daylight speed, and being anable to see the road far enough in advance.

The officers of the new bank are: Arvid Carlson, Middle River, President; A. L. Carlson, Holt, Vice President; Thomas A. Anderson, Stephen, Cashier; and C. G. Moline, E. I. Amundgaard and Joe Conix, Argyle, Directors.

Speakers for the day at Argyle will be such prominent men as Attorney General Harry H. Peterson, Senator Elmer A. Benson, Commissioner of Banks, Robert D. Berry, all of St. Paul and Elmer Bergdol, Secretary of the Civic and Commerce Association, Minneapolis.

Weed Meeting June 26

Representatives of the Minnesota Department of Agriculture will meet with the Township Chairmen at Argyle on Friday, June 26 at 1 p. m. to discuss with them the weed problem affecting farmers in this section.

Farmers should be vitally interested in the work carried on in the control of noxious weeds. It is suggested that farmers, finding new weed with which they are not familar bring them to this meeting or turn them over to their Township Chairmen or to the County Agent to have them identified. They should be particularly watchful for such weeds as leafy spurge, creeping jenny and perenial papper grass. These weeds have been found in the county. These three are considered the most noxious of all weeds and require from 2 to 3 years of black cultivation to eradicate them.

Cooperation on the part of the farmers is absolutely necessary if we wish to control the spread of these weeds which are costing the farmers hundred of dollars each year.

County Fair Opens Monday

When the gates open Monday morning for the 30th Annual Marshall County Fair at Warren, Northwestern Minnesota residents will witness some of the finest educational and entertainment features ever offered in this section next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, according to Wm. Forsberg, Warren, president of the fair association.

Elsewhere in this paper details of the fair program are published in an advertisement from the Fair Association. The Lew Rosenthal Amusement Co. of Waterloo, Iowa will again supply the grandstand attractions. This company has furnished the grandstand attractions at the local fair for several years, much to the satisfaction of the people of the Northwest. This year a greatly improved program has been arranged which will thrill and delight the visitors who attend the fair.

Although the fair is being held at an early date this year, interest in the various exhibit divisions has reached a new high peak and indications now point to record displays. Entry days for exhibits will be on Saturday from 1 to 6 p. m. and on Sunday from 1 to 6 p. m. Judging of exhibits will start at 8 a. m. on Monday.

The Northwest's greatest farm machinery display will crowd machinery row at the fair grounds with implement dealers from several villages of the county reserving space. All of the new and modern types of farm machinery will be on display.

The new Fair Grounds Park will be open for public use durting the three day exposition. This beautiful wooded park will afford an ideal spot for picnics, and visitors are invited to make full use of the facilities offered while attending the fair next week. Fresh drinking water will be available at convenient taps lacated on the fair grounds, while concessions will have ample stocks of other good things to drink and eat.

Plan now to attend the fair at least one complete day—you will enjoy every minute of it.

Invented Post Card

The post card is an unofficial card of a regulation size transmissible under the postal regulations through the mails upon prepayment of postage. It originated in Austria in 1869, the inventor being Dr. Emanuel Herman. It was introduced into England in 1870 and into the United States in 1873. A picture post card was first used by a book-seller named Schwartz of Oldenburg, Germany, in 1870, but the first post card of a picture appeared in 1875.

4-H Club Meeting Held

Again the 4-H is busy preparing for the big three-day exposition held at Warren annually-- the Marshall County fair! At their meeting on Friday evening a short discussion was held concerning the event which all the members again welcome. Let's boost for the local workers.

Flash! Another event is close at hand! The Eastern Council, organized some time ago at Grygla, will hold their meeting at Sunnyside on Thursday evening, July 2nd. The officers of the Holt club are acting on the program committee for the event. This includes Vivian Larson, Marlan Augustine, Beatrice Larson, and Doris Larson.

A refreshment committee was elected as follows: Angeline Augustine, Marian Larson, Marilyn Oakey and Myron Johnson.

What do you think of the 4-H Club as an orgonization? Not so bad, eh? We've learned to work and play together, and isn't cooperation one of the important movements of the nation today? Come on, everyone! Boost for the workers of the 4-H and we'll boost for you. We still continue to "pledge our heads to clear thinking, our hearts to greater loyalty, our hands to larger service and our health to better living for our home, our club, our community and our country." With these 4-H's joined together, we 4-H members jorrney through life and come in contact with living organisms. We feel the presence of an "all-powerful guiding force with which we work to develop better things from the best. We cooperate with our environment and sing "A Song of The Open Country". Let's have cooperation.

Holt Wins First Ball Game

The Holt Diamond Ball team won their first game of the season here on Tuesday evening when they played the Radium Diamond Ball team. The game was a huge runaway for the local boys as they trimmed the visitors 24 to 6. The local team has a strong lineup at this time and last night they played the Newfolden team at Newfolden. The results of the game will be published next week.

Those playing on the local team are: Harold Nohre, Ed Olson, Walter Stienhauer, Walter Larson, Bill Davis, Johnny Doran, Elmer Doran, Joe Moline, Roy Moline, Roy Sorum, Raymond Ortloff, Dennis Wegge, Art Krogen, Robert Stienhauer and Adolph Stienhauer.

Primary Election Was Dead

The Primary election here on Monday was a very quiet affair. Only 35 of the hundred voters in this village went to the polls to cast their vote. The Republican carried the precinct.

Theo. Christianson won the republican nomination for U. S. Senator and Floyd Olson won the Farmer-Labor nomination. Nelson was nominated as Republican governor and Senator Benson got the Farmer-Labor nomination.

Mud Lake Project Unsettled

Several farmers from the Mud Lake area and other interested land owners out there made a trip to Warren on Wednesday to confer with their attorneys at to the settlement of the Mud Lake cases. As far as we have been told there is not much harmony in the settling.

Help Our Boy Scout Troop

The local Boy Scout Troop No. 112 had a hamburger and refreshment stand out at the Old Mill on Sunday and according to reports the boys made fairly well. The day was cold and business slow at all the stands but nevertheless, the boy scouts here garnered the neat sum of $12.00 clear for their treasury.

The scout troop is trying hard to raise enough money for uniforms and we feel that anything that you can do for them in that line will be greatly appreciated by both the boys and the scout committee here. They will soon go on a three days camping trip near some lake and it would be just swell if the boys could all go dressed up in new uniforms. Lets boost for this project right now. Lets all help.

Many Attended Picnic

Several thousand people from all parts of Marshall County gathered at the Old Mill Site on Sunday to celebrate the Annual Creameries picnic. A real program of speaking, singing, music and sports had been lined up by the committees and the day was a grand success.

The main speakers for the day were: Dr. A. A. Dowell, Superintendant of the Northwest School at Crookston, and M. Stone, of the Land O'Lakes Creameries at Minneapolis.

Misses Harriet and Olive Olson and Mrs. Erland and Alvin Johnson of Oslo and Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Wegge were dinner guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Olson on Sunday.

New French Premier Helps Labor Win All Demands

STRIKING workers who paralyzed the industrial life of France at the moment when the "popular front" socialist majority was taking over the reins of the government, won complete victory with the aid of Leon Blum, new premier, as the general strike was settled, a disquieting note was added by a walkout of 150,000 coal miners and textile workers in northern France.

Labor won the following five demands:

1. Wage increases from 7 to 15 per cent.
2. Recognition of workers' rights to organize in unions.
3. A forty-hour work week.
4. Vacations with pay.
5. Collective bargaining contracts.

Leon Blum

Settling of the strike marked a significant victory for the new government which assumed extraordinary powers to devise measures to bolster France's financial system and revitalize national defenses. "White collar" workers were the only group excluded from the general agreement which was signed by employers at the behest of the government, but the premier promised relief for them. Premier Blum gained support from conservative forces with his announcement that "The People's Front is and will remain hostile to devaluation of the currency." The end of the strike restored a measure of confidence to a panic-stricken nation faced with possible famine due to the tie-up of its transportation, processing and distribution systems by 1,000,000 striking workers.

Texas Opens Its Great Centennial Exposition

TEXAS celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of its independence by opening a $25,000,000 centennial exposition in Dallas. Foremost among distinguished visitors attending the world's fair the first week was President Roosevelt. To obtain the centennial exposition Dallas made available more than $9,000,000 in cash and property. The exposition will be open until November 29. Numerous other celebrations marking the state's 100 years of freedom have been held in various cities and towns of Texas. The exposition presents educational, historic and recreational features associated with a major world's fair.

Largest building on the exposition ground is the $1,000,000 Texas Hall of State, which cost an additional $200,000 to equip. The building was erected as a memorial to the patriots and pioneers of Texas, and is the largest historical museum on the North American continent.

Other buildings and their erection cost include:

United States building, $325,000, largest federal building ever erected at a world's fair; Negro Life building, $100,000, also erected by government funds; Exposition Farm Center, consisting of five great buildings, erected at a cost of $1,000,000; Travel and Transportation building, $365,000; Varied Industries, $440,000; National History museum, $250,000; aquarium, $180,000.

Speaker Byrns of House Is Taken by Death

J. W. Byrns

DEATH, sudden and unexpected, came to Joseph Wellington Byrns, speaker of the house of representatives, and put an end to a notable career. The veteran Tennessee congressman suffered a heart attack, followed by a cerebral hemorrhage, and passed away within a few hours in his apartment in the Mayflower hotel, Washington. For 27 years Mr. Byrns had represented the "Hermitage district" of Tennessee in the house, and he was elected speaker when the Seventy-fourth congress convened in January, 1935. He was a master of parliamentary strategy and so fair-minded a presiding officer that all, even his political opponents, praised and admired him. Before becoming speaker he served long years on the appropriations committee, as member and chairman, and he also was leader of the Democratic majority and chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee.

Grief for Mr. Byrns' death was general and sincere in Washington officialdom. "I am shocked beyond all imagination," said Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, the minority leader. "It is a terrible thing. It is an almost irreparable loss."

Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader, after expressing his own sense of loss, added: "His work during the session has been very difficult and trying. He was a great speaker."

President Roosevelt in a statement from the White House expressed well the high esteem in which Mr. Byrns was held. Said he:

"Fearless, incorruptible, unselfish with a high sense of justice, wise in counsel, broad of vision, calm in adversity, and modest in victory, he served his state and the nation with fidelity, honor, and great usefulness. I personally mourn the passing of a steadfast friend of many years."

Impressive funeral services were held in the chamber of the house, the President, members of the cabinet and numerous diplomats being present in addition to all members of congress.

Senate Passes Its Own Tax Revenue Measure

THE senate passed the $829,000,000 compromise revenue measure by a vote of 38 to 24. The bill then went to conference with the house of representatives which had enacted a revenue measure carrying out tax proposals made by President Roosevelt. The senate measure called for a 15¼ to 18 per cent tax on net corporate incomes as compared with the present 12½ to 15 per cent levy; a new type of 7 per cent tax on undistributed profits; repeal of the existing exemption of dividends from the 4 per cent normal income tax; an increase of 1 per cent in the individual income surtax on surtax brackets between $6,000 and $50,000. The house measure called for a tax on corporate net income scaling up to 42½ per cent, depending upon the amount of undistributed profits.

Chester Davis Appointed to Reserve Board

Doctor Tolley

AGRICULTURE was given representation on the federal reserve board through the appointment by President Roosevelt of Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA to that body. In discussing his appointment, Mr. Davis said: "The fiscal policy of the federal government has never been tied in closely enough with agricultural problems." Mr. Davis has spent most of his life in agricultural activities. He was born on a farm in Iowa, was graduated from Grinnell college and later owned and operated a farm. For some years he was a newspaper publisher and then became editor of the Montana Farmer.

Mr. Davis was succeeded as AAA administrator by Dr. Howard R. Tolley. Nationally known as a soil expert, Doctor Tolley helped Mr. Davis draft the soil conservation plan, enacted after the United States Supreme court decision invalidated the AAA. He has been carrying on this program during the absence of Mr. Davis in Europe.

Filene Plan Urges Ban on Unfair Trade Practices

IN A report just made public the business advisory council proposes a simplified basis for industrial self-regulation through the medium of voluntary joint agreements on unfair trade practices enforceable by the federal trade commission. The report was prepared by the council's committee on unfair trade practices of which Lincoln Filene of Boston is chairman.

Outstanding among the committee's proposals were suggestions that each branch of an industry, such as wholesale, retail, and manufacturing, police the activities of each other through confidential reports to the federal trade commission and that no attempt be made to include trade practice and labor provisions in the same agreements.

Sir Samuel Hoare Back in British Cabinet

Sir Samuel Hoare

CALLED back to the British cabinet, which he left some months ago as a political scapegoat, Sir Samuel Hoare was made first lord of the admiralty, to succeed Viscount Monsell. Sir Samuel, who boldly faced a hostile house of commons last December to defend his part in the Anglo-French peace plan which would have given Mussolini only a part of Ethiopia, will face the task of solving problems arising out of British-Italian fleet difficulties in the Mediterranean. The biggest task facing Hoare, however, is restoration of the British navy to an undisputed position of supremacy on the seas.

Industrial Mobilization Plan Is Condemned

THE so-called industrial mobilization plan of the War department, providing for a military dictatorship over labor, capital and industry, as well as censorship of the press in wartime, was severely condemned in a report to the senate by the munitions committee.

The committee objected particularly to the proposed conscription of labor as being dangerous to democracy.

Thomas Held Responsible for British Budget Leak

J. H. THOMAS, until recently British colonial secretary, was found responsible by a special government tribunal for the leak in budget secrets which enabled some of his friends to profit largely through insurance against tax raises. Final disposition of the case was left to the house of commons. Thomas, once an engine wiper and later a powerful figure in organized labor and politics, termed the tribune's verdict "cruel." He said: "My own conscience is clear. I repeat what I previously stated upon oath: that I made no disclosures of budget secrets to anybody."

South China Declares War on Japanese

Chiang Kai-Shek

WITH a declaration of war against Japan by the Canton (south) Chinese government, first steps were taken in what may become a nationally concerted effort to resist further encroachment by Nippon on China's territory. Leaders were hopeful that a coalition of the Canton and the Nanking (north) governments might give China a united front against Japan for the first time. Should the South China war lords succeed in enlisting the support of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek and his Nanking forces, a substantial movement to expel the Japanese from North China could be undertaken.

Sec. Ickes Complains of Wallace's Encroachments

THE Department of Agriculture recommended to the senate that the administration of the Taylor grazing act, affecting 80,000,000 acres of range land, be transfered to its control from that of the Department of the Interior. Secretary Ickes retorted with the accusation that the Agricultural department had hindered his program to rehabilitate western grazing lands. He said Secretary Wallace's department has insisted upon having so many CCC camps for the forestry service that the Interior department could not get enough CCC help to administer efficiently the Taylor act.

Is Father Once More at the Age of 96

GEORGE ISAAC HUGHES, ninety-six-year-old Confederate veteran, amazed the medical world by becoming a father again. This time a girl was born to Hughes' twenty-eight-year-old wife, Libby Hill Hughes. The Hughes' first born is now a lusty lad of seven[illegible] months. Surprisingly vigorous for [illegible] Hughes was the only veteran [illegible] to attend recent Confederate memorial exercises. The veteran's mental faculties are clear. He is able to do considerable physical work including caring for a garden, chopping wood and doing odd jobs.

Marshal Badoglio Is Given Roman Triumph

Viceroy Badoglio

MARSHAL PIETRO BADOGLIO, conqueror of Ethiopia and now viceroy of that part of the reconstituted "Roman empire," returned to the Eternal City in triumph and was vociferously welcomed as a hero. Sixty thousand Romans welcomed him as he stepped from his train, and Premier Mussolini modestly waited in the background until they had shouted their greetings to the veteran warrior. Then Il Duce came forward and kissed the viceroy on both cheeks, and the high ranking Fascist military leaders paid homage. With the premier and the picked troops forming the escort of honor were the entire cabinet. Several days later a great military review was held.

The other side of the picture was seen in London, where Haile Selassie, the deposed emperor of Ethiopia, arrived in tears and sadness, though he was given an ovation by the cheering thousands that had seldom been accorded to visitors to England. Many of the Londoners carried Ethiopian flags or scarlet banners reading "Welcome to the Emperor." With the white sympathizers were many African chiefs in native robes, Somalis, negroes, Hindus, Chinese, and colored people from all parts of the world.

There was an outburst of wild cheering when Selassie, bareheaded and wearing a long black cape, stepped from his private sleeping car and was greeted by many notables, including O. C. Harvey, private secretary of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary. Harvey was the lone representative of the British government.

Plow Enthused Webster More Than Public Life

Daniel Webster was a firm believer in deep tillage. A century ago, convinced that plowing was too shallow, Webster developed a plow 12 feet long from the tips of the handles to the tip of the beam, with a share 15 inches wide. It turned a furrow 14 inchs deep. Eight oxen pulled it.

Webster was delighted with his plow, and wrote: "When I have hold of my big plow . . . in a brush-covered pasture and hear the roots crack, see the stumps go under the furrow out of sight, and observe the clean, mellow surface of the land, I feel more enthusiasm than comes from my encounters in public life in Washington."

Hello Everybody!

"The Ghost of San Vito"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU know, boys and girls, for a long time I've been telling the world that truth is stranger than fiction, and now here comes Aurelius Menegus of Clifton, N. J., to agree with me. He had an adventure once and—well—he admits it's so fantastic that he has to pinch himself every once in a while in order to believe it could have actually happened to him.

I warn you right at the start that this is a ghost story. One of the best ghost stories I ever heard, at that. It happened to Aurelius on June 8, 1930, but the beginnings of the yarn go back farther than that, to take in the history of a room—a simple bed-chamber in a little mountain tavern near San Vito in the Italian Alps.

The story of that room was this: A year or so before, the curator of an Italian zoo stopped there with his wife. He had with him a collection of reptiles which he had caught in the mountains and one of them—a venomous snake—had bitten his wife to death. Thereafter, that room was hoodooed. Four tourists died in it, and all of them had been found with terrible expressions of horror and surprise on their faces.

The doctors who examined the victims said they had died of fright. No one in San Vito had the slightest doubt as to what had caused that fright. The ghost of the curator's dead wife haunted the room—so they said. And a terrible ghost she must be, to cause people to die from the sight of her.

Aurelius Goes Calling on the Spook.

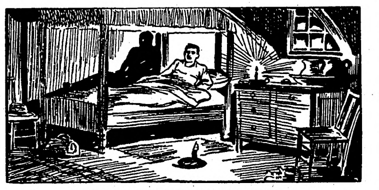
That's the history of the room. Now let's turn the clock ahead a year or so to June 16, 1930, and get on with the story of Aurelius Menegus. He was more than a little interested in that ghost yarn, for he was something of an amateur zoologist and taxidermist himself.

So, finding himself in the neighborhood of San Vito, he determined to spend the night in that mountain inn—if possible in the very room where five people had died. He wasn't superstitious, and he certainly wasn't going to be frightened by what he considered an idle peasant's tale.

He asked for the room and got it. He had with him five white rats which he kept for experimental purposes, and these he put in the room. Then, after feeding the rats and getting a bite of supper himself, he prepared to go to bed.

White Rats Were Companions on His Weird Vigil.

The room was a small one in the attic of the inn. It was lighted by candle and furnished with a small canopied bed, washstand and a few chairs. There was a small grating in the floor—evidently part of the ventilating or heating system.



A Three-Foot Snake Was Coiled on the Floor.

Aurelius let his white rats out of the perforated valise in which he carried them, to let them run free for the night. Then he slipped on his pajamas, blew out the candle on the chair beside his bed, and crawled under the covers. He was tired, and in a few moments he was asleep. But he wasn't destined to sleep long, for the ghost of the attic room was to come back to haunt him.

Aurelius had been asleep for half an hour, when suddenly he was awakened by a strident squealing. The squealing, he recognized, was coming from the white rats, which were scampering madly about the room.

Specter Turns Out to Be a Venomous Adder.

Aurelius began to feel the hair on his head rising. Some people say that an animal is conscious of supernatural things long before humans are. What did those rats see that was throwing them into such a panic?

He sat up in bed, lit a match and applied it to the candle. The dim yellow glow lit the room, but showed no presence other than his own. He was about to get out of bed and search the dark corners where the candle's rays didn't penetrate, when suddenly, he stopped, pulled his feet back into the bed again. There on the floor was a three-foot snake!

Aurelius knew enough about snakes to recognize this one. It was an Alpine adder—a deadly reptile that strikes with the swiftness of lightning and injects a venom that kills its victims almost instantly. That was the answer to the mystery of the haunted room. The snake which had killed the curator's wife had never been recaptured.

Double-Barreled Shot Gun Exorcises the Murdering "Ghost."

It had crawled away down the ventilator and had been living there ever since, killing the people who happened to be lodged in that room. A simple enough explanation. But Aurelius' plight was a bit more complicated.

"I didn't dare move," he says, "for fear of the adder which would spring at the slightest stir. I wondered if the reptile would take a notion to crawl up on the bed. If he did, there wasn't much hope for me. But no. The adder wasn't interested in me. He was attracted by the possibility of a meal from those squealing rats of mine. It turned to stalk one of them, and at that moment, the door of my chamber opened and the landlord, Giovanni Floriani came in."

Aurelius started to shout a warning, but it wasn't necessary. The old landlord had heard the rats squealing and scampering about overhead and, knowing the reputation of the room, had come prepared for any eventuality. He had a double-barreled shot gun in his hand and he fired point blank. The reptile's head was blown to pieces, and the white rats gathered round the body and began completing the destruction. The murdering ghost of San Vito wound up by furnishing a meal for some of its intended victims.

175 Medieval "Monsters" Left in French Flanders

A recent census in France reveals that there are 175 medieval monsters existing in French Flanders today, writes a Lille (France) United Press correspondent.

They are the world's biggest toys, averaging 22 feet in height and are one to five centuries old. The Flemish populations of France have been amusing themselves with these monstrous playthings since the Fifteenth century. The municipal councils provide communal shelter for these wood, cardboard and cloth giants which emerge once a year to preside at the town festivals and carnivals.

Gargantua, the historic brain child of Rabelais, resides at Bailleul and receives the homage of his subjects on Mardi Gras. Calais, the seaport town, is ruled by two gigantic sailors, each 20 feet tall, while Bergues has its own individual citizen named Berguemard, a giant of 1830 who wears a stove-pipe hat that is five feet high.

Goliath is at Ath, a village of French Flanders. Mrs. Goliath lives with him and their sole exercise is their annual and hilarious promenade through the streets of Ath.

The most socially prominent of the group is Gayang who has lived in Douai for 407 years. Dating from medieval times, he is fittingly outfitted with a shield and lance and is brought out every July 6, to repulse an imaginary invader.

He is followed by Mrs. Gayang, who dresses as a lady of the Renaissance period, and then come their three children, Jacquot, Filliot and Binbin. There is even a royal jester of colossal dimensions who accompanies the parade. Gayang has still another advantage over other Flemish giants as he has his own "national anthem" which is sung with fervor each year as he is paraded through the streets of historic Doua

Political Conventions.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—This month, being engaged in the somewhat responsible task of filling the most important office in the world, the accredited representatives of two great parties will discharge these duties by acting as though, shortly before they were born, their respective mothers had been horribly frightened by an intoxicated toe-dancer.

Irvin S. Cobb

At Cleveland, if the delegates for Zookus fail to behave like howling dervishes for at least forty minutes following the mention of his name, they're traitors to a sacred trust. And if the delegates for Gookus don't carry on longer and louder and crazier than the Zookus bunch did, they'll never again dare lift their shamed heads.

The setup will be different at Philadelphia, the cradle of liberty, although occupied at times by some funny foundlings. There, when the chosen mouthpiece offers a candidate whose second nomination has been certain ever since his first nomination, every patriot on the floor must be thrown by the astounding shock into a happy delirium, lasting until his legs give out, his larynx splits and he can't think of any more hysteria symptoms.

* * *

The Seattle Lochinvar.

LATEST news from the hospital is that America's boy-sweetheart—the young Lochinvar out of Seattle—is suffering from overwork. A large number of traffic cops around Washington are reported to be in the same fix. The barkeepers haven't sent in their casualty list yet.

One of the big circuses is certainly overlooking a gorgeous chance. Think of the sensation—alone in a steel-barred arena—Clyde Beatty with Zioncheck.

* * *

Black Masked Bigots.

INTO a sour soup-stock of religious and racial hatred, stir a mess of high-sounding titles, blood-curdling oaths and foolish regalias, and you've got a mixture with an irresistible appeal to parties whose average hat size is six and an eighth and whose souls are aslosh in the bilge-water of bigotry. Presently they're adding miscellaneous murder to their mummery, as in Michigan, where sundry gallant heroes seem about due to suffer prolonged attacks of short-haired paleness, which is a disease brought on by wearing a close hair-cut behind some high stone walls.

They say such organized intolerance-epidemics come in waves, but did you ever notice that we never have any of these waves when America is at war? Then nobody objects to putting Catholics or Jews or negroes in the firing line. Nobody questions their patriotism or their fitness to defend the nation's flag, and, after awhile, peace comes, and all of a sudden a lot of folks discover that those of certain creeds and a certain color are unworthy to be classed as citizens or even as human beings.

* * *

RECENTLY in outlining the political high spots scheduled for the next four weeks, the writer failed to mention the Liberty League.

The Liberty League will not hold a convention, but will have tea on the Du Pont lawn. There may be speeches and perhaps a snappy prayer by the rector of the Church of SS. Midas and Croesus, but Al Smith will positively not speak, having already learned the bitter lesson that a fellow can pick an awfully bad spot to make an awfully good speech in.

And as for trying to keep a brown derby and a silk topper alternately bouncing off a single dome—well, in the future, I predict, he'll leave that sort of thing to professional jugglers. Even so, Al Smith is better qualified than some for wearing two hats at once, having at least twice as many brains as you'd find under the average politician's headpiece.

* * *

Sacrifices to Science.

I LOVE dogs and admire them for traits which so many human beings lack. So, because some of us joined a movement to save impounded dogs from possible mutilation and torture at the hands of unauthorized agencies and guarantee for them a swift merciful death a large number of folks seem to think we're vivisectionists.

For one, I'm against weird experiment upon dumb brutes in the often abused name of science. When I read that some gifted exhibitionist swapped the vital organs of a pelican and a hound pup, so that the pelican went out in the back yard and barked himself to death at the moon and the pup choked trying to carry half a bushel of fish in his lower jaw, I fail to see where the cause of medicine has been advanced. But since the war on disease demands the sacrifice of certain creatures that mankind may be benefited, I'd rather that every white rat in America should have the bubonic plague twice than that my grand-babies should have it once.

WORLD FAMOUS DRIVERS KNOW ONLY ONE TIRE IS Safe!
Firestone GUM-DIPPED TIRES WIN INDIANAPOLIS 500 MILE RACE
On May 30th, Louis Meyer broke the track record, at 109 miles per hour, driving the entire race without tire trouble of any kind. He is the only driver ever to win the race three times, and has always used Firestone Tires. No tires except Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires could have resisted the terrific heat generated at such high sustained speeds. You can have no greater proof of blowout protection.
Not one of the thirty-three drivers would risk his life on any other tire, for each driver knows that heat is the chief cause of tire failure and blowouts. Firestone cords are soaked in liquid rubber, which saturates and coats every cotton fiber, preventing friction and heat and adding great strength. This is the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping, that gives you greatest blowout protection and safety.
Profit by the experience of famous drivers. See your nearest Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer, and have your car equipped today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

ONCE IN A WHILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONCE in awhile we just remember
April and May, not just December.
Once in awhile we quite forget
All of the hurt the heart has met.
Once in awhile some hour or duty
Makes it again a world of beauty.
Once in awhile our minds recall
Joy, and nothing much else at all.

Once in awhile we cease our fretting;
Nothing has changed, we're just forgetting.
Once in awhile if that be true,
Isn't it always the thing to do?
Once in awhile we're done with sorrow,
But if today, why not tomorrow?
Why can't we whistle, can't we smile,
All of the time, if once in awhile?

ATLANTIC AIR MAIL SEEN IN TWO YEARS

Four Trips to Europe Weekly Are Scheduled.

London.—Transatlantic air mail service will be in operation within two years on a basis of four round trips a week, according to Sir Francis Shelmardine, director general of British Civil Aviation.

Sir Francis declares British authorities have developed three types of airplanes they believe capable of operating the services.

Recent negotiations between representatives of the British government, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada, and representatives of the United States, resulted in understandings being reached which it was hoped would bring about a transatlantic air service connecting these countries.

Full reciprocity between the countries concerned was agreed upon. Operation would be undertaken jointly by a British commonwealth operating organization and an American operating company.

Consider South Route.

Although it was recognized that the northern route via the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada was shorter than the southern route, and would therefore have the advantage of more economical operation, this fact did not preclude the possibility of use being made of the southern route.

Thus will be forged the last main link in the chain of British empire air communications.

In view of the fact that on either route a stretch of approximately 2,000 miles is involved, it would at present be impossible to provide the capacity required for the whole of the mail. Little practical knowledge was available of flying conditions on these routes. Climatic conditions present a number of difficulties yet to be surmounted and the first services would be of an experimental nature.

New Planes Ordered.

Two highspeed land planes, capable of operating the service during the summer under all conditions and possibly even during the winter, have been ordered.

In addition, the air ministry has given financial assistance to Imperial Airways for the development of the Mayo composite aircraft. This is a combination of two aircraft and involves development of a new technique which would shorten the take-off normally required for heavily-loaded aircraft, and might enable a greater payload to be carried out at a lower power output than now possible.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

New York's hundreds of Chinese laundrymen have been hard hit by the depression. Furthermore, the outlook is dark since their business is not coming back to any great extent. An uptown neighborhood establishment, where six yellow men were busy from early morning until far into the night, washing, ironing, attending to customers and smoking cigarettes, now employs only two. A nearby place where the proprietor employed his three cousins, closed recently because there weren't enough patrons. Perfection of machinery, extension of delivery service, advertising and solicitation has turned much of the business away from the hand laundries to the big establishments. So the unemployed in Chinatown increase steadily. The situation, however, in the main, is accepted with true Oriental calm and Chinatown takes care of its own.

* * *

That the stoicism of the East in the face of disaster may disguise an internal ferment was disclosed recently when the Chinese Laundrymen's association met to elect officers. Usually that is merely a formality but the last session caused four men to be sent to the hospital and three to be arrested. It seems that those in power tried to put through a slate. Objections were voiced, accusations made and polite speech turned to hot words. Then there was action and a great scurrying on stairs when the police arrived. The explanation made to the officers was that the chief objection was the introduction of "American methods" into the proceedings.

* * *

In our town, the Chinese population consisted of Wah Lung. He was the most industrious man I ever knew. Not infrequently, he worked all through the night to keep up with the dirty linen of his customers. Also he possessed a remarkable dexterity in manufacturing a cigarette from ordinary pipe tobacco and a piece of newspaper. And I'll never forget the Sunday, he dressed up in peg top trousers, high standing collar—one unclaimed by a patron—toothpick-toed tan shoes and a derby hat and attended the First Presbyterian church.

* * *

The best dog story I've heard in some time was told by Miss Anna B. Sprague. It seems that over in Tea Neck, N. J., there is a big friendly police dog that makes frequent calls at homes in the neighborhood. If the dog happens to be hungry, it heads straight for the kitchen and stands in front of the refrigerator until fed. Recently, it called at the home of a friend of Miss Sprague. Unfortunately for the visitor, the refrigerator contained nothing whatsoever that would appeal to a canine appetite. The lady of the house tried to make her caller understand that but the dog merely continued to stand looking longingly at the refrigerator and nothing she did or said caused it to change its position.

* * *

Finally in desperation, the housewife called the dog's owner.

"I can settle that," said the woman at the other end of the wire. "Put him on the 'phone."

"What do you mean?" asked the worried woman.

"Hold the receiver to his ear and let me talk to him."

The dog didn't want to leave the refrigerator but was led to the phone and the receiver held to its ear.

The dog listened, then ran out of the door.

It seems that his mistress had ordered him to come home.

* * *

Statuesque, imperious looking, she attracted much attention as she came down the aisle of the theater during a performance of "Sweet Aloes." She had on a long fur cape, reddish in color and different from anything worn by any other woman. Plainly it was an expensive wrap and the wearer just as plainly was not at all unconscious of that fact and of the eyes turned toward her. A short distance behind her followed one of those ruddy-faced, evening-attired gentlemen who always seem to me to type the "man-about-town." Suddenly, he glimpsed the lady with the cape. "No wonder there isn't any fox hunting any more," he remarked to a companion. And the lady evidently overheard as her leisurely pace changed to a quick-step.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BILLY MINK FINDS SOME QUEER FENCES

When something new and strange you find,
Watch out! To danger be not blind.

THE trouble with a great many people is that they are heedless. When they find something new and strange they forget everything but their curiosity. Because of this they walk right straight into trouble. It happens over and over again.

But Billy Mink isn't this kind of a person. My, my, I should say not! He never has been. If he had he would have lost that beautiful brown coat of his long ago, and there would be no Billy Mink. Billy has his share of curiosity, but with it he possesses a great big bump of suspicion. When he finds anything new and strange he wants to learn all about it. But right away he is suspicious of it.

When Billy Came to This Place He Discovered Something Queer.

After he had discovered the trap set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the Laughing Brook and had fooled the trapper by getting the fish the trapper had placed in that hole, Billy went on up the Laughing Brook to see what else he could discover. Not very far above that place there was a steep bank on each side of the Laughing Brook. Along the foot of each bank was a narrow strip of level ground between the bank and the water. You see, at this season of the year the water in the Laughing Brook was low.

When Billy came to this place he discovered something queer. It was a little fence. It ran from the foot of the bank straight out into the Laughing Brook to where the water became deep. Midway in this little fence was a gateway just big enough to slip through comfortably. Billy looked across to the other side of the Laughing Brook. Over there was another little fence just like this one, and that little fence had an opening in it.

"Huh!" said Billy. "Huh! Those fences are something new. They were not here when I came down the Laughing Brook yesterday. I wonder what they are for. If it were not for those two little openings I would have to either climb the bank or swim around the ends of those fences, and that would be bothersome. I can go through that little opening there as easy as rolling off a log, but I'm not going to do it. No, sir, I'm not going to do it. There is something wrong about those fences. They look to me as if they had been built just to make me go through one of those little gateways. If that's the case, I'm not going to do it."

So Billy plunged into the Laughing Brook and swam out in the deep water around the end of the little fence. Then very carefully he approached the little opening from that side. The more he looked at it, the less he liked it. Right in the middle of that little opening were some wet dead leaves. "Ha, ha!" said Billy. "Another trap!"

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SECRETS OF GOOD FROSTINGS

THE secret of good frostings and fillings for cakes is no secret at all—just use good material, a little care and a good recipe; here are a few:

Boiled Frosting.

Boil together two cups of sugar, two tablespoons of light corn sirup and one-half cup of water until the sirup spins a thread. Pour it very slowly over two stiffly beaten egg whites, flavor with one teaspoon of flavoring and beat until thick enough to spread well. To vary the recipe, add chopped nuts, raisins, figs or dates. Also cocoanut of various colors may be used to dust the top and sides.

Fudge Frosting.

Cut fine two squares of chocolate and combine with two cups of sugar, one-half cup of milk and one-fourth cup of dark corn sirup. Cook until it forms a very soft ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the fire, set the pan in cold water and cool, then flavor and beat until thick enough to spread on the cake. For those who prefer maple flavoring use either maple sugar or the maple flavor instead of the chocolate.

Tropical Filling.

Put one-fourth cup of sugar, one teaspoon of cornstarch and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt into a double boiler; when well blended add a half cup of sliced orange peel, one-half cup of butter and one egg yolk; cook until smooth and thick. Remove from the heat, add a teaspoon of lemon juice and spread on the layers of the cake.

THE MYSTERIOUS BALANCE

THE items required for this trick are four match boxes, all of similar make. With them the magician performs what appears to be a feat of jugglery.

Carefully setting the match boxes end on end, he holds them upright between his hands. When he takes his upper hand away his lower hand holds the match boxes balanced. Though he performs several maneuvers with the stack, the match boxes do not fall.

The trick depends upon an unsuspected secret. While arranging the stack the magician pushes down the drawer of the top box. Each drawer in the stack locks with the box below. This makes the balance quite simple. The boxes will not come apart until the magician removes them one by one.

Child Portrait Thought to Be Work of Da Vinci

Lyons.—A portrait of a red-haired child recently discovered in a private collection here is believed to be a painting by Leonardo da Vinci. There is no signature on the painting, which obviously dates back to the Fifteenth or Sixteenth century, but it is known that the great Italian painter used to mark his paintings by tucking his initials away in some obscure portion of the canvas.

To prove the authenticity of the painting it will be subjected to various experiments in microphotography. Dr. J. Locard, head of the laboratory of the Lyons police department, which is equipped to make microphotographs, has been engaged in this sort of detective work in regard to crime and counterfeiting.

This time, however, he will use his apparatus to detect the presence of the two microscopic letters L. V. which will give practical proof that Da Vinci was the original artist.

Beauty in Sixth Place in Coeds Life Rating

Ames, Iowa.—Love and health are more important influences in the lives of Iowa State college coeds than is beauty.

That was disclosed in a survey of the valuations placed on a list of 12 factors in the lives of students in Iowa State college home management classes.

Beauty, which was rated as of prime importance by women interviewed recently by a women's magazine, was placed in sixth place by the coeds.

The women whose answers were compiled by the women's magazine rated beauty first and love and affection second. The coeds rated love and affection first; health second. Both groups placed economic security in third place.

Youth was named by women as the fourth most important factor in their lives, while coeds placed it in ninth position. Religion was given twelfth place by both groups.

New Nome Will Rise From Ashes of Fire

Nome, Alaska.—A new and improved city is rising from the ruins of a disastrous fire which swept Nome in September, 1934. Among improvements listed are a reinforced concrete federal building to cost $500,000, a $65,000 schoolhouse, and Coast Guard quarters for crews and ships valued at $90,000.

PWA projects of water mains, combination city hall and fire department and graveled streets, costing $100,000, were recently completed.

English Manor of Tenth Century Passes as Inn

Winchester, England.—One of England's most ancient feudal manors, the "God Begot" hostel here, dating back to the Tenth century, no longer will be a mecca for American tourists.

The hostel, which attracted hundreds of Americans arriving by boat at nearby Southampton, has been sold and will not be utilized as a hotel in the future.

The half-timbered Tudor structure was conveyed to Queen Emma, free of all burdens, by her husband, Aethelred, and she in turn bequeathed it to St. Swithin's monastery.

The manor became a sanctuary for criminals and fugitives and held its own courts of justice until the reign of Henry VIII, when it passed to the dean of Winchester cathedral. The main structure of the manor, built in 1558, remains virtually untouched.

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name

By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

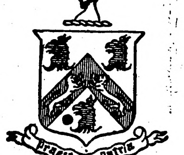
A Gardiner?

THE watchword of the Gardners and Gardiners, "Praesto pro patria" ("I stand for my country"), as their history will show, has been like a burning torch held high in every generation of this splendid family.

The principal family of Gardiners in this country derive their descent from Lion Gardiner, a native of Scotland, who served under General Fairfax as an engineer in the Low countries. He was sent to America in 1635 by the Lords Say, Sele and Brooke, to build a fort on their grant of land at the mouth of the Connecticut river. This he did and called the fort Saybrook, in honor of his patrons. His eldest son, David, born in Saybrook in 1636, was the first white child born in the Connecticut colony.



Gardiner

Lion Gardiner bought from the Indians an island in Long Island sound, called by the English Isle of Wight, paying for it a black dog, a gun and some Dutch blankets. Here he settled with his family and called it "Gardiners Island." This island remained in possession of the family for many generations.

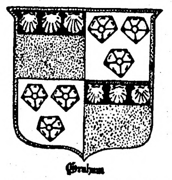
The original Gardners and Gardiners seem to have used the same coat of arms and both spellings of the name, so it is believed that in the beginning they were the same family. Even in America, both houses use the same arms. The above reproduction represents the arms of Joseph Gardiner, of Rhode Island. He came to America by way of Holland in 1650 or 1651. His father was Sir Thomas Gardiner, who fought in the army of Charles I.

* * *

A Graham?

FEW indeed are the families who can boast of a name of greater antiquity or historical renown than the Grahams. The name is Scotch and is derived from one Greme, who was regent of Scotland during the minority of Eugene II, in the year 419. Greme took his name from the Anglo-Saxon "grim," meaning surly or sullen, not a very attractive attribute, but perhaps they interpreted it as one having a stern and courageous look.

The story is that the founder of the family of Greme, a great warrior, breached the wall which formed the Roman occupation of Scotland. In later times a chieftain of the Grahams was a loyal supporter of Sir William Wallace, who succeeded in freeing Scotland from the English yoke, and at the famous battle of Fodden Field the loyal head of the house of Graham fell by the side of his king.



Graham

This family has always been a powerful one in its native Scotland, owning many vast estates, lordships and dukedoms and earldoms. The earl of Montrose was allied with the Stuart cause and paid the penalty with his life on the scaffold in 1660. In Scotland "the great Montrose" is an imperishable memory of its history.

The plaid of the Grahams (all prominent Scottish families belonged to a clan and each clan had its characteristic plaid) is in blue, black and gray. Their war cry was "Killecranie," and their badge was laurel.

Among the earliest American settlers of this family was Benjamin Graham, who located in Hartford, Conn. James Graham was an attorney general, of Boston, Mass.

William Graham was the founder of the first classical school in the South, which is now known as Washington and Lee university, in Lexington, Va.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder.

He had turned into a cheap restaurant, near The Globe, where the slim young man had promised to meet him. Lunching, he mapped out his immediate future. Work-days, Barry Gilbert would live in the little rooms he'd taken Saturday. Week-ends, of course, he'd have to spend at Southampton, as John Clarke Ridder, Jr. That was essential to his contact with Bad Nauheim. And to another, even more essential contact. He was to dine at the Hambidges again next Friday, he recalled—with the lady from Boston to whom Pat must have written flattering things about him. A grand girl, Pat, and suddenly, as we have seen, not altogether unattainable. "If I make good," Barry thought, "I can tell her the truth about myself, and ask her to marry me. Why not? All this John Clarke Ridder, Jr., business'll just seem funny then."

The slim young man arrived in due time, and duly presented his charge at the homicide bureau. First, there was Tim Laugherty, as Irish as Barry, and with almost as ready a grin. They took to each other immediately. "Barry Gilbert," Tim repeated. "Well, the name's all right, anyway."

Tim regarded the Kelly murder as a closed case. So did MacDevitt, and everyone else Barry met at headquarters. "The Rogers kid done it, that's sure," Tim declared. "This Filipino says he didn't let nobody else in that night."

"Maybe somebody else let himself in."

Tim smiled scornfully.

"How?" There was a new lock on that door. Show him the keys, Mac."

Mac obliged.

"Here you are," he said. "It was chained to Kelly's pants button."

"Show him the decanter. Maybe he can get something out of that."

"Why not?" Mac laughed. "There's about half a pint in it."

It was a gruesome exhibit—that bottle which had killed a man. Real cut glass, and nearly a quarter full of reddish liquor. "Wonder why that didn't spill out," Barry ventured.

"Maybe the cork stopped it," Tim replied.

"They didn't find any finger prints?"

"No. The guy must have worn gloves."

"Listen," Barry ventured again. "Why weren't the Filipino's finger prints on the bottle—if he served it?"

"Guess he wore gloves, too. My butler always does!"

"Well, if he wore 'em—"

"I get you," Tim interrupted. "If the guy that done this wore gloves, and the Filipino wore gloves, why then maybe the Filipino's the guy that done this."

"Exactly."

"Say, you got a bean on you," the detective conceded, almost admiringly. "Of course, I still think we got the right party, but he's a cagey guy, that Oriental, and he didn't say nothing about gloves to me. Why don't we go over and see if he wears 'em?"

He didn't. At least, not when he opened the front door.

"Say, Charlie," Tim began; "let us in. We want to ask you sumpin'. Do you wear gloves when you're serving stuff?"

"Sometimes."

"Did you wear 'em that night?"

"Maybe. I don't remember."

He was a thin, sallow youth, with the usual glossy black hair brushed back from his forehead. Nothing remarkable about him—not even his shiftiness. The three men stood in the broad hall of the Kelly house, and Charlie repeated the tale of admitting Rogers, and hearing a quarrel, and returning to his room until the visitor left.

"You were in your room when the row started, then?" Barry asked.

"Yes, sir."

"And you could hear the voices pretty plainly?"

"Yes, sir."

"You came upstairs, and then went back to your room, and stayed there until just as Rogers was leaving?"

"Yes, sir."

"Kelly must have been dead then, if Rogers killed him?"

"Yes, sir."

"But you didn't hear the sound of a blow in your room, nor the thud of a body falling?"

No answer.

"If you could hear voices downstairs, don't you think you'd've heard that, if it had happened?"

The Filipino looked down from one inquisitor to the other.

"Maybe I didn't stay in my room," he said at last, very slowly. "I don't remember."

Tim was about to press the point when there was the rasp of a latchkey being thrust into the lock of the front door.

Then the knob turned, and Mrs. Kelly entered.

She stopped short at sight of the intruders.

The door remained opened.

"Well, Mr. Laugherty!" she exclaimed. "So you've come back again? With a friend, too! Why don't you step in the parlor?"

It Was a Gruesome Exhibit—That Bottle Which Had Killed a Man.

Tim thanked her, and presented Barry.

"Glad to meet you," Mrs. Kelly declared. "Run along, you"—to the Filipino. "Come on in, boys!"

"You're forgetting your key," Barry said.

He took it out of the lock.

"It's a brand new key, isn't it?" he asked, casually.

"Sure," Mrs. Kelly answered. "It's a new lock. Mike had it put on only a few days ago."

"How many keys were there?"

"Two. That one, and Mike's."

Barry was scribbling on the back of an envelope.

Mrs. Kelly was a large woman, in her fifties. Her hair was dyed red—a brilliant, aggressive red unknown to Nature. But she was affable, and extremely good-humored. Evidently, not grieving herself to death about Mike.

"Just dropped around to see Charlie," Tim said. "Anything you want to know, Mr. Gilbert?"

"Just one thing. Where were you the night of the murder?"

Mrs. Kelly laughed.

"You don't read the papers much, do you?"

"Why?"

"Because all about that was in The Herald Tribune the morning after the body was found."

"All about what?"

"All about my being up in Harlem at a dance."

"And what time did you get home?"

"Around daylight."

"Did you let yourself in?"

"Sure."

"And you didn't wonder where Mike was?"

"I thought he was asleep. We didn't room together. The lights was all out."

"No light in the front room?"

"No."

"Sure?"

"Dead sure. Anything else?"

"No, thanks. I didn't mean to keep you so long. But one thing led to another."

"That's all right," Mrs. Kelly assured him. "I got nothing to hide. Drop around any time you feel like it."

"No holes in that alibi," Tim said, as they reached the sidewalk. "Straight shooter, she is. Ran a saloon when Mike married her. You certainly got wound up. What was all that about the latch key?"

"Bright and shiny, wasn't it?"

"Brand new. She told you that. So did I, when we were looking at Kelly's key-wallet."

"Yes," Barry admitted. "But there wasn't any new key in that wallet."

Tim Laugherty stopped short in Fifth avenue.

"You're right," he said.

"I've got the number," Barry went on, producing his envelope. "A 66152. Write that down. A plain, round head. Two of 'em. Where's the other? It never was in that wallet, because every hook's filled."

"Maybe he carried it loose in his pocket."

"Wherever he carried the key, where is it?"

"I don't know," Tim answered. "It wasn't on the body—that's sure."

By now, it was time for his dinner appointment with Peggy.

Still in high spirits, he walked around to her boarding house. Barry remembered Southampton with shame when he saw the Ridders' two shabby rooms. The boy lay in one of them; a bright youngster, five years old. "The doctor doesn't seem to know what the matter is," Peggy declared.

"I know," Barry said. "I'd be sick in this dump. Why don't you bring him out to the country?"

Peggy shook her head.

"I want to be near Jack," she repeated.

"Winslow says he's likely to be free in a week."

Dining comfortably in a nearby cafe, he told her everything that had happened since their parting; all the astonishing events of that day. And, with the recital, Peggy's spirits rose, too. When Barry mentioned his new job, she actually laughed.

"That's funny," she said. "You're doing what the old man's real son wouldn't do."

"I've two reasons," Barry explained. "In the first place it puts me in a splendid position to help Jack. In the second—well, the fact is that I'm nuts about a girl, and I want to make good on her account."

"What's her name?"

"Patricia Hambidge. She lives at Southampton, and she and her father both knew the Ridders. They think I'm young Ridder, of course."

The next morning, Barry dropped in again on Pete Winslow. The lawyer had talked with Peggy's husband, and was persuaded of his innocence. They've got a prima facie case, though," he admitted. "The grand jury'll indict the boy, I'm afraid. We'll get him tried as quickly as possible, and there isn't the slightest chance of his conviction."

Peter leaned forward, his fingers intertwined between his knees.

"That was a shrewd question you asked that Filipino. Only I wish you'd asked it of me. He's prepared now. Never mind. When it comes to cross-examination—"

He rose, with the joy of battle in his eyes.

"But be careful about tipping our hand," he said. "Bring in Mrs. Rogers. I'd like to check-up on her statement."

"Tomorrow?"

"Make it next week."

"He's a great lawyer," Ernie Harwood said, when Barry repeated as much of this conversation as it seemed wise to repeat. "And a wizard at cross-examination. I've seen him discredit one witness after another with mere monosyllables. Tell Winslow I may have a tip for him some day. It's nothing now. Just a phone call. But, if I ever find who it was—"

Barry devoted that evening to drafting a letter for the real Jack Ridder to copy and send to his mother. Something told him that whatever the boy wrote himself would be cold and resentful. That would make the old lady unhappy, and Barry didn't want her to be.

"I've got a job on father's paper," he wrote, with genuine pride. I've respected father's wish as to using his name—except at Southampton, of course. They had to know there. At The Globe, I'm on my own, and getting ahead. I'll be a credit to you yet, darling."

From that, he went into some detail as to his interest in the friend "locked up for murder he didn't commit," and the need of funds for his defense. Even to Jack Ridder, it was obvious that the letter had to be sent, so sent it was—in Jack Ridder's hand-writing—from the railway station post box at Southampton the following Friday. Barry arrived on an early afternoon train.

He had wired Evans to meet him, and found Willetts waiting in the front hall. There was no doubt now that the butler suspected something, and Barry, sure of what he suspected, faced him with a broad grin. "What's the matter with you, Willetts?"

"Matter, sir?"

"You've been acting queer ever since the night Mrs. Rogers spent here. I don't know what you heard that night?"

"Do you mean eavesdropping, sir?"

There was a pained surprise in the man's voice.

"Not me, sir. I've got my position to remember. I've been a butler with some of the best families."

"All right," Barry soothed him. "You think I'm back at the kind of behavior that alienated me from my father. Well, I'm not. That 'glittery lady' is the wife of a man I met in Florida. . . ."

And, for the third time that week, Barry related his story.

"She's a brave little kid," he concluded, "and she's in trouble up to her neck. I'm going to stand by her. I've got a job on my father's newspaper—under an assumed name, because I want to win out on my own. I've cabled my mother for money, and everything I can get goes to that lady until her husband can win on his own. I'm going to be in town most of the time now, working my head off."

Our Public Debt

Washington.—I have received a letter from a reader in my home state of Missouri, propounding a very timely inquiry concerning the public debt of the United States. It is timely for more than one reason. The United States government operates on a fiscal year running from July 1 to the next June 30 and we are, therefore, just about to close another fiscal year. A second reason why this inquiry is timely relates to the size of the present public debt, almost $32,000,000,000.

Our public debt has surged higher than normal during two periods of the last twenty years and the course of the debt, therefore, is one with which most mature persons are more or less familiar. But it remains as a fact that, while most people are informed concerning the total of the national debt, they have not had opportunity to learn exactly what it means to the individual.

Treasury transactions, as a whole, are rather difficult to understand and since the sums in which government figures now run are so huge, the general attitude of individuals is to let the thing pass as a matter for expert attention. It ought not to be so. The public debt is a matter of direct concern to every one of us and that is a further reason why the inquiry mentioned above is important.

I have often wondered whether individuals, in considering whatever obligations they have in the form of debt, take into account the fact that the public debt actually is a commitment against you and me and everyone else.

Persons who have not so thought of the public debt, probably will be shocked to learn that in addition to their obligations that have been contracted personally, there is something like $245 which, although an infinitesimal portion of the public debt, constitutes actually an individual obligation.

Therefore, when any person looks at that vague and shadowy term, "the public debt" in this light, they cannot help but realize that it has a very real and personal meaning to the individual. That enormous sum of nearly $32,000,000,000 must be paid off as any other debt and the government must collect it from everyone who lives in this country.

Again, the public debt may seem a thing far removed but it is brought home directly to each of us through the taxes we pay and in more ways than most of us care to admit we are contributing that tax. So, when the government contracts a debt and arranges to pay it off, the only way collection is possible for the extraordinary amount is by increasing the share of government expenses which each of us bears, meaning of course, an increase in our tax.

• • •

Some History

In 1857, the public debt was only $28,700,000. In that year, each person's share was only $1.01. With the advent of the Civil war, the government needed funds and began borrowing additional amounts until in 1866 the debt reached what in those days was a high figure—$2,750,000,000. At that time, each person's share was $77.69.

Good administration and sound financial policies followed and the debt was reduced, paid off, until during the early 1900's, the debt was redueed until each person's share was something less than $17.

Continual retrenchment was carried on until the World war interrupted the program and fresh borrowings were necessary for prosecution of that great conflict. The borrowing of the war days carried our public debt to a new high point of $26,594,000,000 on August 19, 1919.

The debt, because it was a new peak, looked insurmountable and it was dangerously high but through the administrations of Presidents Harding and Coolidge, the job of paying off the debt was seriously attacked and this program eventually resulted in reduction of the debt to about $16,500,000,000 during the administration of President Hoover.

It was from this low point that the present debt burden has mounted and continues to climb. The depression reduced government income from taxes and left the treasury with a deficit in two years of the Hoover regime.

The result of those deficits was to increase the public debt because money had to be borrowed to pay current running expenses. The borrowing did not appear serious, however, either in the last two years of the Hoover administration or the first year of the administration of President Roosevelt because Mr. Roosevelt had pledged the country during his campaign to economize in every direction. It was his promise that he would curtail expenditures by one-fourth and therefore make the outgo and income of the government approximately the same.

Instead of that course, Mr. Roosevelt initiated the present program of expenditures in huge amounts. The first plan called for the use of vast sums for expenditure by the government in the belief that the paying out of public money would revive industry and that industry, once on its feet, would again yield profit and that profit would in turn produce taxes for the government. Then came the public relief programs for which larger sums—to be exact, $3,500,000,000 in one year and $4,880,000,000 in another year—were appropriated and spent. Thus, we see in the last three years that the debt of the nation has grown from approximately $21,000,000,000 to approximately $32,000,000,000, and each person's share, as stated previously, is about $245.

• • •

Tell the Story

Now, the figures here set out tell much more of a story than just that an enormous and incomprehensible number of dollars have been spent, millions of them needlessly. They tell more of a story, indeed, than just the fact that within another year there will have been approximately $3,000,000,000 more expended and that the debt then will have been increased something like $13,000,000,000 since the Roosevelt campaign of spending began.

To understand the situation in which the United States government and, therefore, the people, find themselves, it might be better to picture what would happen to an individual in the same circumstance. Hundreds of thousands of individuals are in debt but nearly all of them seriously try to avoid getting in debt beyond their capacity to pay off their obligations. If sickness or poor crops or poor business or any one of many other afflictions overtake that individual, even though his personal debts might be liquidated under normal conditions, he is—well, he just sinks.

Our government differs from that individual only in the fact that its citizens regard the government's credit as virtually limitless. It can continue to borrow and people will accept government bonds in exchange for their money for quite a while. But let us attempt to visualize in our mind's eye what would happen should our government be called upon to meet some extraordinary conditions that would be comparable to the loss of a job by the individual who is in debt.

Just how would our government meet the requirements of another war, for example? Just how would it be able to care for the destitute and the jobless, for another example, if our economic conditions would go into another tailspin and we would find ourselves in another depression? The answer seems fairly obvious.

So, I cannot help asking which is the wiser policy—to prepare for future emergencies or to indulge in reckless spending with no thought beyond the present?

• • •

Too Optimistic

It seems to me that the Roosevelt administration has followed the latter course on the optimistic base, entirely too optimistic it appearsand has plunged this country too deeply into debt.

I do not mean to imply that government securities are not good any longer. Far from it. I maintain that as long as our money is any good, our government's bonds are good. Yet, it must be apparent to every thinking person that we cannot continue to spend at the rate that marks the last three years.

I prefer, as against the present spending policies, the policies of President Andrew Jackson, who fought always against excessive costs of government; who demanded consistently that the expense of government be raised regularly for each year's payments and that there be a little extra put away for the proverbial rainy day when the government was called upon for emergency payments. The policies of Andrew Jackson were so effective that during his administration in 1837, the public debt was wiped out and there was actually cash in the treasury besides.

Supporters of the present spending policies will say, of course, that the public debt of those days was in no way comparable to that of 1936. That is true but neither were the resources of the United States in those days comparable to the resources and the wealth producing capacity of the present-day United States. Likewise, the population of the United States in Andrew Jackson's term in the White House was only a mere handful compared to the nearly 130,000,000 of 1936.

So, answering the inquiry as to what the public debt means to the individual citizen, the answer must be a relation of the fact that his family's share as we start a new fiscal year in the government approximates $1,000. It means, further, that through one form of tax or another, that individual is helping to pay the interest of more than $710,000,000 every year. It means, in addition, that his government is in a position for the first time in the lives of most persons now living where it would face extreme difficulty were it called upon to defend our country in war or meet a fresh emergency like that through which we have been passing. Lastly, since government debts in the United States are held to be honorable debts and not to be repudiated, none of us can avoid commands from that government in the future to dig deeper and deeper in the old pocket for the payment of taxes.

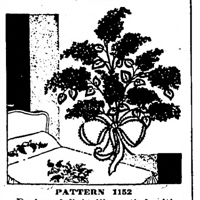
Bedspreads Welcome Delicate Lilac Motif



PATTERN 1152

Dark and light lilacs, tied with a flourish into the loveliest of floral sprays, is far and away the nicest—and easiest—flowery touch one can give a bedroom. Even an amateur will find the large spray easy to embroider on a bedspread with four smaller sprays on the bolster, or scarf ends. The flowers are entirely formed of lazy-daisy stitch and French knots, the leaves of blanket stitch—the rest is in outline. With cotton or rayon floss the designs are seemingly done in no time, in shades of lilac, orchid, or palest yellow.

King Sent Pilgrims to America on Fishing Trip

"What induced a Scottish king to sign the Mayflower's charter to sail to America was not possible gold mines, much less religious freedom, but just Labrador's naturally abundant wealth, viz., 'fish,'" says Sir Wilfred Grenfell in "The Romance of Labrador."

"When the application from Leyden for permission for the Pilgrims to go to America was handed to King James," says Sir Wilfred, "that canny Scot asked simply, 'Why? What profit hath it?' 'Fishing, Sire,' was the improvised reply. 'By God's soul, 'tis an honest calling,' he answered. ''Twas that of the Apostles.' And he forthwith signed the charter.

Here is some waste. Figures compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Standards show that a car driven at thirty miles an hour gets more than twice as much mileage per gallon of gasoline than one driven at eighty miles per hour. An average passenger car will go eighteen miles on a gallon of gas if the speed averages thirty miles, but only 8.6 miles if driven at eighty miles per hour.

Tests made at the Indianapolis Speedway some time ago by the American Automobile Association showed very clearly that oil consumption also increased greatly as the speedometer went up.

Cutting down on speed not only reduces chances of accidents but also saves you dollars and cents. It pays to control your speed.

Public Confidence

Challenging a recently published statement that there is an "apparent loss of public confidence in banks," William A. Boyd of Ithaca, N. Y., asks why, if this were true, bank deposits are constantly increasing. "I maintain that any banking institution which has continued to serve its community since the trying days of 1929 must be enjoying the respect and confidence of that community, and I am sure that the very large majority of banking institutions which have come through this depression have never had to 'regain' public confidence," he says.

Trust Institutions

A directory of trust institutions published by the Trust Division, American Bankers Association, lists 2,853 institutions having aggregate capital funds of $4,416,000,000 and total resources of $35,443,000,000. Control Poultry Diseases

Many common poultry diseases and parasites may be controlled or held in check by moving the growing chicks on to new ranges each year. According to A. M. Pilkey, Northwest School and Station poultryman, infested soil should be plowed and cropped for at least three years before it is again used as a poultry range. The Colony houses should be thoroughly cleaned before moved on to the cleaned range. The latter should be well drained and seeded to some appropriate green crop, such as alfalfa.

Mr. Pilkey emphasizes the importance of providing ample floor space in order to prevent overcrowding. For young chicks one square foot of floor space for three chicks will be sufficient and not over 300 chicks should be kept under one brooder. At four weeks of age, the cockerel should be removed and roosting space doubled for the pullets by the time they are six weeks old. At ten weeks of age, the space should again be doubled. Pullets will do better if divided into flocks of from one to three hundred birds each than if allowed to range in large numbers. One acre will supply sufficient forage for about 300 pullets.

Mistakes--and Mistakes

The following has been credited to a schoolboy who wrote an essay or something of that kind entitled "An Editor."

"If the editor makes a mistake folks say he oughta be hung; but if the doctor makes mistakes he has the undertaker to bury them, and people say nothing because they can't read Latin. When the editor makes mistakes there is a big lawsuit and swearing, and a big fuss; but if the doctor makes one, there is a funeral with flowers and perfect silence.

"A doctor can use a word a yard long without him or anyone else knowing what it means, but if the editor uses one he has to spell it. If the doctor goes to see another man's wife he charges for the visit, but if the editor goes, he gets a charge of buckshots. Any old college can make doctors to order, but an editor has to be born." -Iowa Publisher

BANKERS SUPPORT ACTIVE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association is promoting widely among bankers the practice of aiding their farm customers in installing on their farms better financial, accounting and operating methods. It also cooperates in the endeavors of the state bankers' associations along similar lines.

The commission has published a book on "Making Farm Investments Safe," presenting a compendium of helpful material published over a period of years as a reference guide in the daily routine of banking and farming relationships. It has also published "Factors Affecting Farm Credit," discussing in an illustrative way how farm credit can be obtained on a sound basis.

Another publication is the monthly Bulletin of the commission which circulates to about 10,000 persons, among them the county agents throughout the United States, who make frequent use of the material and suggestions prepared by the commission. Likewise, the commission has appointed 2,300 key bankers covering every county in the United States, who act as focal points in their districts in fostering better understanding between bankers and farmers.

A HUGE BANKING SYSTEM

The latest official figures covering all banks in the United States show that there are 16,042 licensed banking institutions of every kind and that over 63,000,000 persons have entrusted them with their deposits to the amount of $44,800,000,000.

These blanks will show the location of field and in the statement signed by the farmers and neighbor the number of acres plowed under are given.

When summer fallow is practised for the control of quack grass, sow thistle, leafy spurge, bind weed and perenial pepper grass the field to be summer fallowed should be inspected before plowing, by a Community Committee man who will fill out forms provided for this purpose.

Farmers should be sure that these things are done before going through with these practices.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder. Barry suspects the Filipino servant of Kelly.

—10—

"Yes, sir."

"I've been a loafer most of my life—and this is the beginning of a new chapter."

"Thank you, sir," Willetts said. "I'm very pleased, sir. If you don't mind my saying so, very pleased."

There were three memos of telephone messages from Pat.

Looking at them, on the library table, Barry went on grinning. He called her immediately, and she asked where he'd been all week. When he told her, she seemed almost annoyed. "So you've deserted me for a chorus girl," she said.

Could Pat be jealous?

"How soon can you come over?" she inquired. "Marian's not here yet, and dinner'll be late, but I simply can't wait to hear your adventures in sleuthing."

As he dressed, Barry kept thinking of this conversation. Absurd that Patricia Hambidge could be worried by his attachment to the "glittery lady." "Willetts and Pat both oozing disapproval. Or do I merely imagine it?"

But Pat's disapproval, at least, was depressingly evident from the moment he saw her.

She met him at the door, looking lovelier than ever.

"The one girl in the world for me," Barry thought.

"Let's sit on the sun porch," Pat greeted him. "Father'll be down in a minute. Marian came over by ferry from New London. She's dressing. Fancy your being concerned with this Kelly murder. A true motion-picture hero. Go on; I want all the details."

And, as Barry related them, the girl's irritation began to show in her face. It wasn't fair, she said, to "drag poor old Peter into it." Just because they'd met in this house at dinner. Nor could she see why he wanted to go into his father's office under the name of Barry Gilbert. "Frankly, I'm disappointed in you," she concluded, and obviously meant it.

Before Barry could reply, the Judge appeared, looking tired and haggard. That changed the subject, and Patricia's voice, which had been a little strident, softened again. She was plainly disturbed about the old gentleman, and kept glancing at him anxiously. "Father's been ill all week," she said.

"You ought've called off this dinner."

"I wanted you to meet Marian. But I do hope she comes down soon. Father's got to get to bed early."

The Judge patted her hand.

"Nonsense!"

"The doctor warned you against late hours," Pat reminded him. "But you would go to that banquet last Friday."

"That wasn't late hours," the Judge argued. "We were all through before midnight."

"But then you went for a walk," Barry said.

He said it quite innocently, but he was startled at seeing Hambidge's hand close spasmodically over Patricia's.

"Who told you that?" the Judge asked.

"Mr. Winslow."

Hambidge relaxed again.

"So I did," he recollected. "But only a couple of blocks."

"Nearer a couple of miles, wasn't it?"

Barry was still making conversation, but there was nothing casual in the Judge's "Why do you say that?"

"Mr. Winslow says you saw that taxi accident at Sixteenth street and Fifth avenue."

The Judge raised his eyes to Barry's, almost defiantly.

"The taxi accident I saw was in Times square," he declared. "I don't know where you got the idea that it was at Sixteenth street. I certainly didn't say that to Peter."

"What does it matter?" Pat asked. "Here we are, gossiping, when I'm supposed to be preparing you for a reunion."

"A what?"

"A reunion. With an old friend. That's the reason Marion was so anxious that I should have you here. I didn't know myself until half an hour ago. Marian Lorn. Do you remember? She knew you at Harvard."

Well, it was bound to come, Barry thought.

"Are you surprised? Marian wanted you to be—terribly."

"I am—terribly."

This was the pay-off. What would Patricia say?

Patricia was saying, "Well, you must be delighted, too. Marian was going to surprise all of us, and then she lost her nerve. 'Wouldn't it be too catastrophic,' she said, 'if he didn't remember me?'"

Miss Lorn was on her way down the stairs.

Barry braced himself.

"Come on, you!" Pat called. "Dinner's waiting, and so's Mr. Ridder."

Marian raced down the steps, and halted, looking at him across the balustrade.

"Mr. Ridder?"

Now for it!

"Well," she continued, "the joke's on me. I should never have known you."

"I'd've known you anywhere."

"Of course, you had to say that. But didn't your hair used to be dark?"

"Sure; I hennaed it."

"No foolin'! I thought you were slighter, too. But, of course, there was only that one evening."

Thank God for that!

"Don't tell me we met only once?"

"Don't you remember?"

"It doesn't seem possible that I let you slip through my fingers."

"Come on," Patricia urged. "Everything's getting cold."

Not Barry. He was warming up, and actually enjoying himself. It was amazingly how his luck held!

"Well, It Was Bound to Come," Barry Thought.

A pretty girl, Marian; all fluff and gurgle. She and Barry had the table conversation pretty much to themselves. Patricia put in a word occasionally, but she was distressed about her father, and with reason, for the Judge seemed suddenly worn out. Exhilarated by this newest escape, Barry was almost brilliant. They were finishing their coffee, when Marian said, "Do you still play?"

"Bridge or golf?" he asked.

"Silly! The violin, of course! I hope you haven't been flattering yourself that it was you I remember. It wasn't. I didn't even know whether your hair was dark or fair, but I'll never forget the way you played the Liebestod."

"You never told me you played," Pat said.

"Oh, I don't any more. That was a youthful indiscretion."

"Youthful genius, I call it!" Marian persisted. "That night was full of music, Pat. A party at Betty Fletcher's. I came late, as usual, and the lights were very low, and Mr. Ridder was just beginning the Liebestod. Little you knew what an admirer you left in that darkened room."

"Shame on you!" exclaimed Patricia. "You've got to play for me now."

Waterloo.

"I haven't touched a violin since I left college," Barry protested. "I don't even know where the old fiddle is."

"Mine's upstairs," Marian interjected. "I'll bring it down."

And she bounded out of the room.

"I can't play any more," Barry held out, lamely, "and I flatly decline to destroy Miss Lorn's illusions, or yours."

"No excuses," Pat said, very definitely. "Come on; we'll go into the drawing room."

As they passed through the old fashioned sliding doors, Marian, instrument in hand, reappeared.

"I'll accompany you," she insisted, "and I've brought the Liebestod."

"That's great," Barry said, "but I warn you—"

Patricia was opening the piano.

"I warn you," Barry said. "I'm going to make the most awful sounds human ears ever heard."

And, with that, he pulled together the double doors.

"Ouch!" he exclaimed.

They all turned to him.

"What's the matter?" Pat asked.

"Nothing serious," Barry replied, clamly. "I've slammed the doors on my fingers."

He held up his right hand.

It was crushed badly.

Everybody was extremely solicitous, and Pat wanted to send for the doctor.

"Certainly not," Barry declared. "It's only broken the skin."

"I'll take care of it now," Patricia said, dispatching the butler for witch-hazel and bandages.

"Well, that's the end of the violin playing," Marian remarked.

"I'm afraid so. Wasn't I stupid?"

"Not at all," Patricia answered, manipulating the gauze deftly.

"The Judge wanted to go to bed early, anyway. I wonder whether you'd mind telephoning for Evans."

"I'll run you home in the roadster," Pat volunteered, touching the bell again.

"It's been a swell evening," Barry insisted, giving Marian his left hand. "Pleasant surprise, meeting you here. This isn't good-by, is it?"

"That's up to you. I'll be around until Monday."

"Good night, Judge, and I hope you feel better tomorrow."

The roadster had been brought to the door, and Patricia climbed into it. "I'll be back soon," she promised.

Five minutes later, the car halted in front of the Ridder house.

"Thanks awfully," Barry said.

"Don't mention it."

There was something very like mockery in her voice.

"And, Mr. Gilbert—"

For an instant, Barry wasn't certain he had heard aright.

"You've got courage," Patricia went on. "I'll say that for you. And a grand sense of melodrama. I suppose you picked that up in Hollywood."

"I don't know what you're talking about," Barry floundered, helplessly.

"No? Well, maybe I'll tell you sometime."

She laughed.

"Meanwhile"—as he alighted from the car—"I'd watch my step, if I were you."

"I'm all right," Barry rejoined.

"That depends," Patricia said. "You're being a little bit reckless, I think."

She put her foot on the accelerator, and the car moved away.

CHAPTER V

Pat knew of his imposture.

That was clear. And what else? For hours after her car had left him at the door, Barry sat in the library of the big house where he had no right to be, thinking, thinking. And the more he thought, the more complete was his mystification.

Every word Pat had spoken, every intonation, was impressed on his mind. "And, Mr. Gilbert—" she had said. "You've got courage. And a grand sense of melodrama. I suppose you picked that up in Hollywood."

How did she know?

Obviously, the crushed finger had not deceived her. No question about it; the girl had seen through his desperate ruse, and realized that he had closed the doors on his hand deliberately to avoid the discovery that he was not John Clarke Ridder, Jr. She must have had some hint of his brief career in the movies.

After all, that would have been simple. The vague recollection of his appearance in a picture; an old circular, with his photograph. Not without pride, Barry reflected that he had won mention in advertising before he left Hollywood. What did it matter, anyway? She knew. And she had advised him to watch his step. "You're being a little bit reckless, I think," she had warned him.

Was that a warning—or a threat? And why should Pat threaten? The answer to that was apparent. "She doesn't want me to ask questions about her father. But why not? What is she trying to conceal?"

That, too, was easily answered.

Of course, there had been no taxi accident in Times square. It was absurd to suppose that two cabs had mounted the pavement and killed two women almost simultaneously. The Judge's accident had been at Sixteenth street. What was he doing down there—a hundred yards from Mike Kelly's—at two in the morning? The same morning Kelly was murdered? A few hours before the filing of a decision alleged to have been dictated by Kelly.

"None of my business!" Barry snapped at himself. "I'm not a detective." But, why should Pat be afraid of investigation?

Why "afraid?" She was worried about her father's condition, and did not want him harassed needlessly. Under the circumstances, of course, she resented Barry's probings. "But, damn it," Barry exclaimed, "she began resenting before I even mentioned her father!"

He made an effort to marshal his facts.

"Three things are clear," he began. "Kelly was expecting someone when Jack left . . . Or was he? Winslow doubted that, too. Anyway, Kelly told Jack someone telephoned. And then Hambidge arrived at Sixteenth street. Hambidge denies that he did so. And then Hambidge's daughter warns me—"

He had begun pacing the floor.

You Can't Rely on Tomorrow

"Manana," meaning tomorrow, is the usual answer a foreigner receives if he asks a Central or South American to do a piece of work which will be well paid for when it is performed.

Perhaps it is the heat. Perhaps it is just the nature of the South American native. But it cannot be wholly his nature, for when a war is going on he can fight hard and consecutively.

* * *

I have known many men who were not at all lazy, who would toil like Trojans after they started, but the difficulty of getting them started was so great that few people would take the trouble. I think most of us are a little like that. There are men—and I know some of them, who love work as fat men love food, and who are never happy when they are idle. But to most men, the business of getting started is unwelcome.

* * *

I have told before the story of Balzac, the astoundingly prolific French novelist. He loved to loaf, as many other men do, but he knew that if he didn't write there would be neither food nor fame for him. Being quite able to use both of these, Balzac hired a man whom he charged with the duty of chaining him to a chair, and not unchaining him till an adequate number of pages had been written.

Sometimes the novelist would get restive, leave off his writing and suggest to his keeper that enough work had been done for the day. But the servant was inexorable. When the regular number of sheets were unfilled, there was no furlough for M. Balzac. He would beg and plead with his servant, but all in vain. At last with a weary sigh Balzac would take up his work, and write furiously so as to get to an end of the business of that day. The world ought to remember that servant as a real benefactor of the race.

Happy are the people who escape from the curse of restlessness or laziness. It can soon become almost a disease. It has ruined the prospects of many people who without it would have been among the keenest minded and most useful of people. But since it exists, it must be taken into calculations.

* * *

If you have this restlessness or laziness, your work will be twice as hard, for you will cull out little holidays all the time and have to toil doubly hard making up. It is fortunately a fault that many people lack. But they are the lucky ones. If you have it get rid of it, and get rid of it as soon as it is humanly possible. If you don't, you will run for the rest of your life at half speed, and probably not arrive in a very desirable destination when you should be taking life more easy.

TEA TOWELS BRING GAYETY TO KITCHEN

But you can take an afternoon off and embroider yourself a set of tea towels with these amusing Mammies, for the work goes very quickly, it's cross stitch, outline, running and single stitch. Her gay bandana and checkerboard apron suggest themselves for the brightest floss you can find. A set's nice to donate when Fair time comes around.

Uncle Phil Says:

Work First, Then Play

Play is an important part in the program of life, but work must be done before we can afford to play.

Somehow or other it seems so much easier to profit by the mistakes of others than by our own.

It is not a few faint wishes, but a lifelong struggle, that makes us valiant.

Reliability First

The worst thing that can happen to a man is to lose his reputation for reliability. Nothing can square him.

You never can tell. Reform sometimes gets no farther than stirring up the mud.

Since there are so many mistakes to make, what's the use of making the same one twice?

It isn't necessary to be forward to make progress.

The man who tries to achieve something and fails is infinitely greater than the man who tries to do nothing and succeeds.

Earth's Temperature May Be 8,000 Degrees 100 Miles Down

Wells, water, gas or oil, show what the interior of the earth is like. Deep wells in California reveal that the temperature of the earth rises about one degree for every 25 feet of depth. In Wyoming the temperature mounts one degree for each 22 feet. At 3,500 feet there, water boils.

Other parts of the earth are not so hot, however. The average rise in temperature is only about 80 degrees per mile, or about one degree for each 66 feet of depth. At this rate, the temperature of the earth 100 miles down may be 8,000 degrees, only a thousand degrees cooler than the sun's surface!

Blemishes Made Her Old Looking

Face Clear Again with Cuticura Soap and Ointment

Here is a letter every skin sufferer should read. Its message is vital. "There were blemishes on my face, of external origin, and they made me look old and haggard. They were red, hard and large. They would hurt, and when I scratched them the skin would become irritated, and I would lie awake at night and start digging at my face.

"But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one tin of Cuticura Ointment my face was cleared again." (Signed) Mrs. L. Whetzler, 2nd St., Floreffe, Pa., June 15, 1935.

Physicians can understand such letters. The Cuticura formulas have proved their effectiveness for over half a century. Remember, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are also for pimples, rashes, ringworm, burning of eczema and other externally caused skin blemishes. All druggists. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c.—Adv.

Townsend Plan Flops

WASHINGTON.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend's fanciful dream for payment of pensions of $200 per month for everyone over sixty years of age seems to have gone up in smoke, but there are developments in connection with the California doctor's unworkable scheme that merit comment. The good doctor and his half-baked idea have been skidding rapidly since the House investigating committee showed up the plan as a befuddled idea and as I once predicted, the bubble burst in a big way.

While I am inclined to believe that Dr. Townsend was honest and sincere in proposing the $200 per month pension, it was the sort of thing that serves as an inducement for racketeers to gather. It was the old molasses barrel for the flies in the world of racketeers. It never had a chance to go anywhere and never will, because it was fundamentally unsound. We can dismiss it then except for the two phases which ought to be vigorously condemned by right-thinking people everywhere.

The two circumstances which I hear discussed most frequently are: The tragedy, the heartaches, that obviously follow in the wake of "movements" such as the Townsend plan that cannot succeed and that draw to themselves thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of persons who believe they are going to benefit; and secondly, it seems to me that the House committee, headed by Representative Bell, of Missouri, overplayed its hand with the result that it has brought upon House committees the same public disgust and distrust as characterizes 90 per cent of the Senate investigations.

Each of these conditions is to be deplored. Each is definitely destructive. There can be no more excuse for some of the methods employed by the House committee in crucifying Dr. Townsend than for Dr. Townsend himself to wreck hearts and hopes and homes by pushing forward such a miserably impossible proposition as his $200 per month pension program.

The House committee had within its power opportunity to do a magnificent job in exposing the racketeering that become part and parcel of the Townsend plan. It had within its hands the capacity to educate millions within the United States against following such an illusion, such a mirage, as the Townsend plan. If it had confined itself to that work, Representative Bell and his committee should receive the plaudits of the nation. But the sad story is that the committee under Mr. Bell's guidance allowed itself to become an agency of prosecution, even persecution, rather than an unbiased investigating unit, determined only to obtain the truth.

* * *

Committee Errs

Since there never was any question that the Townsend nostrum would fall of its own weight eventually, it is difficult to understand why the committee resorted to the tactics it used. I watched some of those hearings. As the committee delved deeper into the activities of Dr. Townsend and his associates, it became infuriated. That was where it made its big mistake and it is going to be quite a long time before House committees again can have a reputation throughout the country of conducting unbiased and reasonable investigations.

Dr. Townsend was sufficiently "hard boiled" to justify the committee in making a vigorous investigation. He was sufficiently indifferent to their offers or hints of co-operation to warrant a feeling on the committee's part that they had to "bear down." Yet, it must be said the committee went beyond all reason and I imagine that in the end it will flare back on the individuals.

Now, Dr. Townsend surely cannot blame anyone other than himself for the fact that he is faced with proceedings by the United States attorney. It will be remembered, of course, that Dr. Townsend deliberately walked out of the committee and refused to testify. That has always been held as contempt and Congress has the right to punish for contempt. In this instance, the House of Representatives elected to turn Dr. Townsend's case over to the United States attorney for punishment in court rather than to employ a House vote which might send the elderly dreamer to jail.

Further, the whole Townsend investigation has turned out to be something of a mess like the Townsend plan itself.

* * *

Second Type of Politics

Thus, there is every evidence of a second type of politics in this investigation. The evidence of politics lay in the fact that the House voted the inquiry largely because many of the individual House members were afraid, they were too cowardly, to take a definite stand in their home districts against the Townsendites. True, they did not know how strong the Townsend movement was. So, as politicians always do, they dodged the issue and moved to expose it through the medium of a House investigation rather than fight individually to show how ridiculous, how unsound, the plan was.

Having set up the picture showing an utterly impossible program on the part of Dr. Townsend and his associates and followers, the House politicians were confronted suddenly by Dr. Townsend's arrogance in his refusal to testify. That presented a sudden change in the scenery. To explain the dangers in this new problem, it is only necessary to say that if the House had acted promptly by voting that Dr. Townsend was in contempt and must spend some time in jail, I expect the result would have been martyrdom for Dr. Townsend. Martyrdom is always bad from a political standpoint if the opposition has the martyr.

The house, therefore, has turned over the affair to the courts and the courts, being slow moving as they always are, will not get around to prosecution of the case until it is too late to have any influence on the election. So we can see readily that Dr. Townsend is left out in the cold. He can neither use the influence that is characteristic of martyrdom nor can he say that his skirts are clear. The house has left him hanging conveniently in mid-air and it was done solely for political reasons.

There may be some more hearings on the Townsend plan during the summer but the chances are that Representative Bell will not call the committee together again for some months. Practically, the case is closed. It has undoubtedly stopped to a large measure the drain that the Townsend organization was making on the unthinking, the aged and the destitute whose quarters, dimes and nickels have financed the thing thus far. While the committee did a good job by exposing the character of the scheme, I still am doubtful that it has brought to itself or to the house of representatives any fresh confidence in our governmental structure.

17-Year Locusts

The national capital, along with many other sections of the country, has been listening to the purring of hordes of "locusts." I use the word locusts in quotation marks because they are not really locusts. They are cicadas but to the most of us they are and will remain the seventeen-year locusts.

It is said that the first colonists in America, never before having met with the insects and believing that everything of God's creation was accounted for in the Bible, concluded they were locusts and the name has stuck. In any event, they appear in greatest numbers at seventeen-year intervals and 1936 seems to be a banner year.

Back in 1919, trees in many sections of the country were pierced by tiny saw-like instruments which the Department of Agriculture says are part of the equipment of the female cicadas. Billions of eggs were deposited under the soft bark. A month or two later, grubs emerged on the branches and dropped unnoticed to the earth.

Then, the chronology of the life of these cicadas becomes a matter of darkness for seventeen long years. The insect in grub form burrowed itself in the soil and subsisted on the juices of roots. As far as anyone knows they did little or no harm but after sixteen years and a few months of this life, the grubs awoke this spring and out they came. They acted on instinct, of course.

Through the last several weeks these great beetle-like bugs with wings like isinglass have been humming and thrumming and leaving their empty shells attached to trees and grasses.

During that period, the males have spent their daylight hours singing. The Department of Agriculture is not quite sure why this singing has gone on because it has ascertained that all of the lady cicadas are quite deaf.

Perhaps I have devoted too much space to the story of the seventeen-year locust. Perhaps the seventeen-year locust is not important at all except to the robins and the starlings and the sparrows and the other birds which have had a feast in 1936 that almost no other bird now living has known. But I have a thought about these seventeen-year locusts, a train of thoughts, in fact. They lead to this:

What will conditions be in 1953, or seventeen years hence when those humans on earth will hear again the mating song of the locusts?

Will the policies and the principles initiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt and called "the New Deal" be firmly imbedded as American traditions or will they be cast out as impractical and forgotten? Will the changes in civilization be such that people will be willing to submit to regimentation, to have their government tell them what to do and how to do it, or will this nation be a nation of individuals who insist upon the rights and the privileges which the founders of our country believed to be just and right?

Care of Little Things

Life is made up of little things, and he that scorns them despises his own real interest. There is an old and true saying, "Take care of the minutes and the hours will take care of themselves." This may be rendered, take care of the little things, and the more mighty matters will be likely to be well done.—J. W. Barker.

PARTIES and PROSPERITY

Ice-Cream Consumption a Barometer of Economic Conditions

ICE-CREAM consumption fluctuates in sympathy with general economic conditions, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. In the boom year of 1929 we consumed more than 250 million gallons. By 1933, however, production had shrunk to less than 150 million gallons.

Records of 1934 show that we are back to a consumption of nearly 180 million gallons of ice-cream.

Children's Parties Increase

If ice-cream is a barometer of economic conditions, then the number of children's parties—at which much of this ice-cream is consumed—might also be taken as a barometer. Certainly in prosperous times we can afford to do more for our children. Therefore, while tiny envelopes are flying through the mails announcing birthday parties, spring parties, Easter parties—parties of every description—it is well to consider new ideas in food, games and decorations for these most delightful occasions.

For there is very definite vogue in children's parties, just as there is in any other parties. See to it that you don't give a 1935 party in this bright new 1936! If it is a spring party, use cellophane, green or white to cover your tablecloth—it makes a gleaming table setting—and use pink ribbon where the pieces of cellophane join. Cover your candle-holders, also with cellophane and tie pink ribbon bows at the base.

Fun and Good Eats

A Flower Hunt is an appropriate contest. Cut pictures of flowers from a seed catalogue. Hide them in the house, or on the lawn. Award a prize for the child who has found the greatest number of flowers which he can identify by name. Garden tools or a garden hat and overalls will be an appropriate prize.

Food? It must be as gay as the new party frocks and as pleasant as a picnic. And the food mustn't look like ordinary food at all, but food which Merlin or some good fairy has been busy making unbelievable.

Another good rain fell here on Tuesday afternoon and evening and the crops are coming along in leaps and bounds since the moisture came. Monday Tuesday and Wednesday were cool, and cloudy with rain showers which was fine for crops around here.

Seed Alfalfa Before July 15

With many sections of Minnesota having sufficient moisture and with the Goverment promising cash benefits to farmers who increase their acreage of legumes, the next two weeks should see a lot of alfalfa and sweet clover seeding done, says Geo. H. Nesum, extension soils specialist, University Farm. The most favorable time to seed alfalfa or sweet clover without nurse crops is from June 15 to July 15, he points out.

Best results in seeding alfalfa alone are obtained when the land has been summer fallowed and the weeds killed by frequent cultivation. Land that has grown winter rye can also be seeded down successfully when enough moisture remains, though such seeding would not qualify for first class payments under the soil conservation program. On rye ground reasonably free from weeds, alfalfa may be drilled in the stubble or the land may be plowed shallow, harrowed and culi-packed, and then the alfalfa sown. Before seeding alfalfa, the farmer should be sure that his land has sufficient lime. Where there is any doubt, he should have the soil tested, but if the land has grown sweet clover abundantly, or if alfalfa generally does well in the area without liming, there need be no doubt. Land previously limed and used for alfalfa usually will be suitable for seeding again without reliming.

Alfalfa or sweet clover seeded now without a nurse crop should not be harvested or grazed this fall as the young plants will need all the growth they can make to furnish protection through the winter.

Caterpillar Leaving State

Northern and northeastern Minnesota is beginning to recover from one of the worst caterpillar plagues of recent years.

Officials of the state division of forestry who returned last week from an inspection trip through the infested area said that the caterpillars were rapidly disappearing and would last only a few days longer.

The insects, known as the forest tentless caterpillars, covered a large portion of the extreme northern part of the state, extending roughly from the Itasca Park region eastward to Cook county and north into Canada.

The amount of damage done by the caterpillars is difficult to estimate because many trees will withstand two successive caterpillar invasions without apparent injury. However, some of the affected forest regions in Minnesota are experiencing their third successive caterpillar plague and may suffer considerable damage.

It is believed caterpillars appear in very large numbers about every ten years. Trees may be saved by spraying with arsenate of lead, but this method is impractical over large areas.

Henry Nohre Bought Farm

Henry Nohre made a deal this week in which he became the owner of the former Gust Petersen farm three miles east of Holt. The farm has been rented the past years by Alfred Larson. Mr. and Mrs. Nohre will move onto the 80 acre farm next spring.

Many Paid Their Taxes

Several farmers from here made a trip to Warren on Tuesday to take care of their taxes. That was the last day that taxes could be paid under the reduction law. Land on which the taxes remainsd unpaid on June 30th will go to the state on Oct. 8, 1936.

According to reports, the land in the Mud Lake area was exempt from this ruling until the matter concerning the project is settled with the state.

Mr. Willey, Warren; Mr. Fred Fields, Stephen; Albert Lokken, Newfolden; and Clarence Doran, Grygla, are in charge of the respective districts conducting the kittenball schedule so that the winners from each district will be competing.

Each family or club will bring their picnic lunch. At 1:15, there will be a program of music provided by the club members themselves, with the Strandquist band, Honor Bright quintette, Boxville 4-H club quartette, and others taking part. Many Attended Scout Feed

The local Boy Scout Troop under the able leadership of Hartley Peterson, Scoutmaster, gave the people of this community a real treat on Monday evening when they served a big bean feed at the basement of the Nazrreth Lutheran Church. The boys had spent all day in the woods west of town baking beans in pots in the ground, Boston Baked Bean Hole style. They also baked a bushel of fine potatoes to go with the beans.

Besides the beans and spuds the boys served bread, butter, pickles and coffee. Around eighty people came to partake of the fine meal and the boys felt proud to have such a good turn-out for their first public festival.

The intentions were to serve the meal out-doors but the weather looked too rainy to take a chance on having the crowd get wet. Some time a little later on the boys will stage another big feed and it is hoped that it can be had out in the open and that still more people will patronize them. The proceeds from the feed were about $16.00. Out of this comes the expence for some of the items served. Several people donated potatoes and beans to the scouts for the feed and they express their appreciation for this.

Digging Out Peat Fires

A company of CCC boys from the Thief Lake camp are at the present time working in the Mud Lake area putting out peat fires. During the recent dry weather we had the peat fires were ruining a lot of fine hay meadow out there.

Celebrate 4th At Gatzke

E. M. Loven, one of the up-and-coming merchants of Gatzke was in town last week advertising for the big 4th of July celebration which they are staging at Gatzke. Mr. Loven stated that the celebration will be something on the order of a small county fair.

So far arrangements have been made for all kinds of concessions, ball games, speakers, airplane rides, races, music and fun of all kinds during the day and evening and also a big dance in the new Young People's hall which has just been moved into the village and all fixed up for the occasion.

The Holt Community Band will furnish the patriotic music during the day and it is expected that most of the people from Holt and community will go there to celebrate.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder. Barry suspects the Filipino servant of Kelly. When Barry visits the Hambidges, the judge denies the accident he witnessed occurred near the scene of the Kelly murder, where such an accident had occurred. Patricia bids him: "Watch your step, Mr. Gilbert."

Suppose the Judge had killed Kelly. What did that prove? "I'm assuming that Kelly compelled this decision," Barry reminded himself. "Well, if he did, why should it have been filed after the compulsion was removed? It was filed the next morning. That certainly indicates that the Judge knew nothing about Kelly's death."

Once more, Barry heard the hall clock strike three.

"I'm arguing in circles," he thought. "And getting nowhere. That's where I've been getting all week. Gumming things up, too. Tipping off witnesses, and making a complete nuisance of myself. I said three things were clear, and they weren't, but two are. I've landed myself in a mess, and the sooner I get out of it the better for everybody.

"If I clear out, and let things take their course, I might come back, some day, when I've really made good—"

His hand still hurt the next morning, but the resolution to "clear out" remained fixed.

And he was still dreaming.

"Some day, when I've made good—"

Willetts interrupted.

He was serving breakfast, at the moment.

"I was talking to Evans, sir."

"Yes?"

"Telling him what you told me last night, sir — concerning Mrs. Rogers, and the Kelly murder. Evans thinks it's very significant, what you said about Kelly expecting somebody after Rogers left."

"He does, eh?"

"Yes, sir. And he thinks he can find who it was."

Barry opened his egg.

"He'd like to tell you his scheme, sir."

"It's no use," Barry observed, curtly. "I've decided to drop the whole business."

"Yes, sir."

Willetts went on serving, but there was disapproval in his manner. Barry felt it, as he had twice before.

"Any reason why I shouldn't drop it?"

"That's for you to say, sir."

"But you think there is a reason. All right; sit down and tell me about it."

"I couldn't, sir. My position won't permit of my sitting down in the presence of my employer. It isn't done, sir. And your position won't allow of you leaving a woman in the lurch, sir. If you don't mind my saying so, that isn't done, either."

In utter amazement, Barry merely stared at him.

"You see," Willetts continued, quite forgetting himself, "a gentleman's got certain responsibilities. That's what makes him a gentleman. You said this lady's 'in trouble up to her neck.' It looks to me, sir, as if that was a pledge. It looks to me as though you were bound to make good, no matter what's happened."

He paused, and then his own impetus carried him on.

"You said, 'I've been a loafer most of my life.' A loafer might 'drop the whole business.' There's no reason he shouldn't. But it looks to me as if a gentleman ought to carry on, sir."

"You're right, Willetts. Tell Evans I'll be glad to see him in the library."

Barry, the "bum," had stepped into a gentleman's shoes, and found that they had to be kept shining.

All that Willetts had said, the former Duke had said to himself, over and over again. "That's all right for guys with an income," Barry had argued. "In luxury, and papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not?"

Now he had an income, and was "in luxury and papa's office." "I won't be there long," Barry thought, "if I defy Pat. Anyway, I'm a gentleman, for the moment, and a gentleman can't 'abandon ladies in distress.'"

Pat was a lady in distress, too, he reflected. "In trouble up to her neck." "The way I went on last night," he ruminated, "anybody'd have thought that I thought the Judge killed Mike. What nonsense. That harmless old chap. If there's any chance of his being involved, why then it's up to me to find who did the trick. I've got two men to get out of difficulties."

Evans found him ready for the "scheme."

"As I get it from Willetts," Evans said, "somebody telephoned Kelly that he was coming right over. What would you do after you'd done that, sir?"

"Well, what would I do?"

"You'd hop in a taxi."

"Probably."

"So we want to round up the taxi-drivers that were in the neighborhood at that time. Luckily, there was an accident, Willetts tells me. My plan is to advertise—like as if we was the relations of the deceased lady. Fifty dollars reward for information leading to spotting the cab that deceased her."

"And then?"

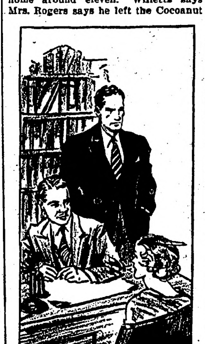
"Then we third-degree everybody that answers the ad. 'Did you see the accident? How did you happen to be there?' It might turn the trick."

Evans was full of Barry's own zest for "sleuthing." And quite as eager to "jump at conclusions." Nothing discouraged him. What if the accident had occurred two hours after the probable time of the murder? Who knew that time exactly, and, anyway, the bait of reward might bring people who'd been in the vicinity long before the disaster.

It was arranged that the advertisement should instruct applicants to write to box something-or-other at the newspaper. And that gave Evans another idea. Why did Barry go to town by train? Why not drive in? He could use the car getting around, and to give Peggy—and, perhaps, the youngster—an occasional airing. Moreover—

Evans was enjoying himself thoroughly.

"Reading the newspapers, sir, I ask myself a lot of questions about this here Kelly. The Chink says he got home around eleven. Willetts says Mrs. Rogers says he left the Cocoanut bar around nine. Where did he go then? His chauffeur would know, wouldn't he? You'd be surprised how chauffeurs loosen up to each other."



"And Why Do You Think It Might Have Been She?"

"I get you."

"Simple, ain't it? We find out where Kelly garages. Then I drive you in every Sunday, and keep the car in the same place. And I sugar up to the guy that drove Kelly. It mightn't lead to nothing, but then again, sir, it might, sir."

"It's worth trying. And I'm tremendously obliged to you."

"Don't mention it. After what you did for the missis. As a matter of fact, she put the whole thing in my mind. She's just busting to do something for you, Mrs. Evans is."

All of Evans' suggestions were followed the next afternoon.

And Monday, by appointment, Barry brought Mrs. Rogers to Winslow.

Harwood certainly had not overstated Peter's skill at cross-examination. Sitting opposite Peggy, the attorney led her gently into reminiscence, from which, again and again, he seized upon a word or a phrase as leading to possible material for the defense.

For the first time, the thing took on pattern. Winslow wasn't running about in a maze, but finding a beginning and an end. Taking care, too, that there should be no opening for his opponents of which he had been unaware. Casually, verifying every statement Jack had made to him.

"Tell the story in your own way, Mrs. Rogers. . . . Did your husband say anything about getting even when he left you? No. What time was that? What time did he return? Wasn't gone long, was he? Not really long enough for a violent quarrel?"

"I've told you," Peggy declared; "they were drinking together. And then the phone rang—"

"How do you know it rang?"

"Jack heard it. And he heard someone answer it."

"Someone."

"Jack isn't sure whether it was Kelly or the Filipino. They were both in the hall. Anyway, Kelly came back, and said he was expecting somebody."

"Did he say whom?"

"No."

"Did he say whether it was a man or a woman?"

"I don't think so." Peggy paused. "But it might've been a woman."

Peter nodded to Barry.

"Cherchez la femme."

"I got another idea," Peggy went on. "It might've been the platinum blonde."

"The what?"

"The platinum blonde. Violet Fane. She's one of the girls at the Cocoanut Bar."

"And why do you think it might have been she?"

"Well," Peggy said, "she knew Kelly. She'd just left him when he accused me of picking his pocket. And Morano'd been talking to her, just before that. She might've phoned Kelly to get me off."

Winslow made a note of this.

"I'll find out," he promised.

The interview lasted nearly two hours, and gave both of the visitors fresh confidence.

"They'll indict Jack," Winslow prophesied, as his callers were going. "Probably today. But don't let that worry you. A grand jury hears only one side. We'll do our talking at the trial."

"When will that be?"

"As soon as possible. We're ready now. They have no case. Just the Filipino's evidence that Jack was there. We admit that. But we deny either a motive or a quarrel. If the Filipino says he heard one—well, I suppose Mr. Ridder's given you his answer to that."

"Yes."

"He's got brains, all right," Barry told Peggy, in the elevator.

"Yes," Peggy returned, a bit throatily. "He's got brains, and a heart."

The grand jury found a true bill against Jay Rogers that afternoon. And Barry was off on a quest of his own. "If that was a woman," he decided, "we needn't bother any more about the Judge. And if I can catch that Filipino napping—"

Winslow had warned him against "tipping our hand." "All right," Barry thought; "I'll be careful this time."

The "cagey Oriental" answered his ring.

Barry's last visit had been with Tim Laugherty. Charlie — and Mrs. Kelly, for that matter—had assumed that he was another detective. The Filipino was plainly startled.

"Nobody is home," he said, conclusively.

"You're home, aren't you? And you're the fellow I want to ask a few questions."

"I don't know nothing," the butler insisted.

"You know who telephoned Kelly the night of the murder."

Charlie's putty face turned two shades lighter.

"I thought so," Barry said. "And, if you don't want to go straight to jail, you'd better tell me about it."

"I don't know nothing."

"All right. Come along."

Charlie reconsidered.

"You mean the lady that telephoned?"

"That's who I mean. Who was she?"

"I don't know."

"Didn't she give any name? Or leave any message?"

"No, sir."

"Came around here though, afterward, didn't she?"

"No, sir."

"Somebody did," Barry persisted; "After young Rogers went?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't let anyone in?"

"No, sir."

"Did Kelly let her in?"

"I don't know."

"But he knew she was coming?"

"I don't know."

"You're lying!" Barry exclaimed. "You told Kelly."

"No, sir," the butler replied, very positively. "When the lady phoned, Mr. Kelly—he wasn't home yet."

"What do you mean, he wasn't home—at midnight?"

"The lady didn't telephone at midnight," Charlie said, obviously bewildered. "It was eight o'clock when the lady phoned."

"But you told him that?"

"No," the Filipino answered. "I didn't tell nobody nothing."

"Who did telephone around midnight?"

"I don't know. Mr. Kelly answered that time."

"But you were in the hall?"

"Yes, sir."

"Kelly was sore at you. Why?"

The Filipino went pale. Only for an instant, however. Then he smiled. "Mr. Kelly not sore," he said. "Him very jolly that night."

"All right," Barry observed. No "tipping our hand" this time. "All right, and thanks." His tone was that of a man completely satisfied.

Late that afternoon, Barry took Peg and the boy driving in the park.

Peggy put a brave face on it, but fear was clutching her. "If anything went wrong," she said.

At Right Weight, Age, Sex One May Go Foodless 75 Days

According to Prof. A. J. Carlson of the University of Chicago, a healthy, well-nourished man can live from fifty to seventy-five days without food, provided he is not exposed to severe cold, avoids physical work and keeps his mental calm. It may thus be inferred that the length of time during which a man may live without food depends on height, weight, age and sex, says the Medical Record. The heavier of two men will generate more heat and probably live longer.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes; feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

Fourth Time for Holiday Parties

THE Fourth of July, the most important holiday of the summer season, while still of great historical importance, is celebrated in a very nonchalant and sane manner. To the majority of persons it means a lazy day spent in the country or at the beach, with dinner served picnic-fashion, under the open sky. Or, another popular method of celebration, writes Ethel K. Ehlen in the Detroit News, is to invite a few friends in for luncheon, cocktails or dinner—very informal and served on the porch or terrace.

Buffet service continues in popularity, and is equally suitable for entertaining in town or country. Even a picnic menu may go buffet style these days, and it is a very satisfactory manner of service. If this version is selected for celebration in the country or at the beach, paper table cloths, dishes, spoons and forks, simplify matters considerably. And, the setting may be just as attractive as that in which the conventional china and silver are used. A red, white and blue color scheme may be easily arranged, as patriotic appointments in a number of different versions are available.

If the hostess desires something a bit more formal in character, there is a red satin cannon center-piece, which may be filled with surprise favors, and red satin firecrackers as candy or salted nut containers.

For the children's Fourth of July party, red, white and blue snappers and a table centerpiece consisting of a blue patent leather bag, tied with the patriotic tri-colors and filled with surprise packages wrapped in cellophane, is timely and a little unusual. This clever bag of favors is also nice as a gift to a small child.

Nautical decorations in red, white and blue are cool and summery looking and an innovation in patriotic ensembling for the table. Frosted beverages may be invitingly served in tall crystal glasses decorated with navy blue anchors, ships, and the like, the red note being supplied by the cherry garnish, and repeated in the tiny sandwiches which may be cut in the shape of a firecracker. Ice cream and ices, so important in the American summer menu, will be available for the important holiday in suitable color schemes and designs, and may be packed in dry ice for carrying to the beach as dessert for the picnic lunch.

Numerous handy equipment is available for both cooking under the open sky, or adequately packing picnic menus which have been prepared at home. One of the additions to this already large family is a miniature stove, so constructed that paper may be used as the fuel for the fire; or, twigs for such things as steak and other foods that require a greater amount of heat. Wicker picnic baskets, with or without insulating qualities; long-handle forks, broilers and frying pans; thermos jugs and bottles; all help to make picnicking more delightful.

A perfectly grand kind of picnic basket is a kit of leather, simulated leather or wicker, completely equipped with utensils, china and cutlery, and plenty of separate compartments for packing sandwiches, salads, relishes, desserts and so on.

Cellophane is a wonderful picnic aid for wrapping practically any kind of picnic edibles. Paper table mats, table cloths and napkins, are fashioned of white and designed in such a manner they have the appearance of linen. Paper cups have gone more attractive and practical too—late versions are equipped with handles, which makes drinking an easier process. They, as well as plates and serving dishes are patterned after china, having a smart gold band as the effective decorative medium.

The Fourth of July celebration in the modern manner may take the form of a picnic in quite primitive fashion, or in a more pretentious style, like that just described. Or, if one does not yearn for the open road and sunny beach, the holiday may be gloriously celebrated with informal entertaining at home, with appointments and decorations in patriotic themes. Any of these interpretations are timely and in keeping with the modern scheme of things.

Landon Takes First Vacation in 4 Years

Topeka, Kan.—When Gov. Alf M. Landon and his family left here for Estes Park, Colo., it was the start of the first vacation in four years for the Republican nominee for the presidency. He was to spend two weeks resting in preparation for the campaign and in writing the speech with which he will accept his formal notification of the nomination, in Topeka, July 23. In between he hoped to sandwich a little horseback riding, of which he is fond.

With the governor were Mrs. Landon and the three children, Peggy Anne, nineteen; Nancy Jo, three, and John Cobb, two, and Mrs. Samuel E. Cobb, mother of Mrs. Landon. In addition there were a few members of Governor Landon's staff.

The governor was to return for the opening of the special session of the state legislature the second week in July, but Mrs. Landon is to remain until the notification ceremonies. The children will stay all summer.

1,814,000 Acres

In 1932 there was imported into the United States a total of 344,340 bushels of corn. In 1935, under the Roosevelt acreage reduction program, the importation of corn from foreign farms amounted to 43,242,239 bushels, the production of 1,814,000 acres.

The Poor Pay the Bill

Washington, D. C.—Despite the claims of loading most of the cost burden of the New Deal on the shoulders of the rich: Income taxes paid for 55 per cent of the government spending from 1928 to 1932; in the years since 1932 they have paid for only 26 per cent of it.

Butter and Egg Market

Twenty-three thousand people were denied the opportunity for self support because of the importation from foreign countries of 34,199,683 pounds of milk, butter and eggs during 1935. The tariff policies of the Roosevelt administration were responsible.

Eclectics

The name eclectics is given to those—especially philosophers and painters—who do not attach themselves to any especial school, but pick and choose from various systems, combining doctrines and methods which they find suitable to themselves individually.

Safetygrams

By Fred W. Braun
The Safety Man

I have previously written several articles on the safe construction of our highways. Most motor vehicle accidents can be directly charged to improper action by the person driving. However, because of the difference in make-up of millions of drivers driving automobiles, and their improper practices on the highways, the problem of accident prevention and safety on our highways is difficult.

It ought to be made as easy as possible by highway engineers; roads should be constructed so that all dangerous hills and curves will allow the proper speed and vision.

Shoulders should be wide enough to permit an automobile to park off the highway. Ditches should be sloped and not made steep enough to cause "turnovers."

Historical Society Picnic

The Marshall County Historical Society will hold their third annual picnic on July 12th, at Thief Lake. The selection of this site for holding of this event was made by Mrs. E. M. Evans, Mr. Arvid Carlson and Miss Ottina Rokke, the committee appointed for that purpose. This point holds much historic value and also affords a fine place for picnicing. Plan Huge New Tax Bill for '37

House Democrats Predict the Next Session Will "Act More Intelligently."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Another large new tax bill will have to be passed next year to pay for the unprecedented spending of the Roosevelt administration, the Democratic majority of the house ways and means committe: admitted in reporting on the 803 million dollar corporation surplus tax, drafting of which it had just completed.

In referring to certain provisions of the bill, the 17 Democrats on the committee both startled and amused the Republicans by stating in the report: "This will take care of the President's request until the next session of congress, which can then act more intelligently in the light of the conditions then existing."

The committee's apparent opinion of its own bill was elaborated upon by speakers of the United States chamber of commerce, meeting in the capital, who characterized it, as well as other Roosevelt tax measures, as "irrational, inequitable and a species of economic suicide for the nation."

Some of the conditions necessitating the "surplus" tax and other taxes to follow next year were indicated by Henry Morgenthau, Jr., secretary of the treasury, appearing before the finance committee of the senate after the bill had been passed by the house. He estimated that the deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30 next would be 5 billion 966 million dollars. This was an amount greater by some 44 million dollars than the administration's total expenditures for the fiscal year up to the end of April.

Du Pont Cash Was Okeh When New Deal Got It

Washington.—When does du Pont money become "good" money? Answer: After it has gone through the purification process and found its way into the Democratic campaign chest to keep company with the shekels of the money changers, who, presumably, have been driven from the temple.

Data furnished the United States senate by Senator Hastings (Delaware) list the contributions of the du Ponts and their associate, John J. Raskob, both before and after the nomination of President Roosevelt. They show that Mr. Roosevelt wholeheartedly accepted the active support and financial aid of the men he now denounces for their activities in the Liberty League.

The records in the Senate now show that Raskob gave $25,000 after Roosevelt was nominated, Pierre S. du Pont gave a like amount, and in 1932, after the inauguration, contributed an additional $15,000. To which Irenee du Pont added his check for $5,000.

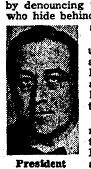
President Roosevelt Is Renominated by Acclaim

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT was renominated by unanimous acclaim by the Democratic National convention in Philadelphia, receiving the convention's entire 1,100 votes on the first ballot. Vice President John N. Garner was likewise renominated for that position by acclaim.

At a great public massmeeting in Franklin field, Philadelphia, attended by 110,000 people on the evening of the convention's adjournment, President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner were officially notified of their selection and responded with acceptance speeches.

The President sounded the battlecry of his campaign for re-election by denouncing "economic royalists who hide behind the American flag and Constitution."



President Roosevelt

The convention unanimously adopted a strong New Deal platform and voted the abolition of the historic two-thirds rule.

The sessions were marked with extreme enthusiasm. Party harmony and a determination to stand militantly on the administration's record in the past three years and present a united front in the coming campaign characterized the convention.

The abolition of the two-thirds rule for the nomination of candidates was one of the significant achievements. This rule, which has been in use for more than 100 years, was superseded by the adoption of the rules committee's report recommending that at future conventions only a bare majority be required for nomination. While some southern and the eastern and western states opposed abrogation, they were reconciled to it by the committee's rcommendation that changes be made in the apportionment of delegates.

The platform pledged continuance of soil conservation, benefit payments to farmers, a sound currency, a balanced budget and a constitutional amendment if necessary, to achieve the party's broad social program. It praised the accomplishments of the New Deal in a preamble, declaring that it planned to continue them in the interest of the nation. The platform's keynote was that the Roosevelt administration has put and will keep the nation "on the road to recovery and prosperity."

Regarding the Constitution, the platform declared that while the Republican platform proposes to meet national problems by action of the separate states, the Democratic party recognizes that minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, monopolistic and unfair business practices, dust storms, drouth and floods could not be handled by states. It stated:

"If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendments as will assume to the legislatures of the several states and to the congress of the United States each within it proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the state and federal legislatures within their respective spheres shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

In addition to soil conservation and benefit payments, the farm plank pledged the Democrats to financing share-croppers and tenants in buying lands; favored commodity loans on farm surpluses and retirement of ten million acres of submarginal land from production and rural rehabilitation.

Railway Pension Acts Declared Unconstitutional

PENSIONS for railway workers received a setback when the District of Columbia Supreme court ruled unconstitutional two acts passed by congress last year.

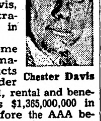
The court held that the government had no right to levy or collect taxes to finance the rail pensions and invalidated as "inseparable" a companion tax measure providing for payment of the pensions.

Both acts were passed last year under the sponsorship of the administration and with the support of railway labor leaders after the United States Supreme court had held unconstitutional the 1934 railway retirement act. They were designed to meet the high court's objections.

One of the measures involved levies upon railroads and an excise tax of three and one-half per cent "of the compensation not in excess of $300 per month paid to its employees." Workers would have paid a three and one-half per cent income tax upon their wages not in excess of $300 per month. The money thus collected would go into a pension fund. The other act established the retirement system for employees at the age of sixty-five, with pensions ranging up to $120 per month.

Farm Income Up 90 Per Cent, A. A. A. Report Sets Forth

AN INCREASE of 90 per cent in the cash farm income on cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn and hogs from 1932 to 1935 was recorded under the Agricultural Adjustment act, invalidated by the Supreme court last January, according to the annual report of Chester C. Davis, former administrator, made public in Washington.



Chester Davis

Cash farm income from these five major farm products which came under production control, rental and benefit payments was $1,365,000,000 in 1932, the year before the AAA became operative. For 1935 it was $2,593,000,000.

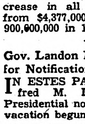
The report pointed out that cash farm income from all other products increased in the same period from $3,012,000,000 to $4,307,000,000.

Mr. Davis, who was recently appointed by President Roosevelt to the Federal Reserve board, declared that cash available for living expenses, taxes and interest from farm cash income was the highest in 1935 since 1929, and two and one-half times greater than it was in 1932.

Under the AAA, the report sets forth, rental and benefit payments accounted for one-fourth of the increase in all cash farm income from $4,377,000,000 in 1932 to $6,900,000,000 in 1935.

Gov. Landon Makes Plans for Notification Speech

IN ESTES PARK, Colo., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, continued his vacation begun with his family the week before and made plans for reconvening of the Kansas legislature and for the acceptance speech he will deliver in Topeka on July 23.



Gov. Landon

Although Governor Landon was resting preparatory to the rigors of the campaign, affairs of his state and conferences with political advisers occupied considerable of his attention.

When the Kansas legislature reconvenes a proposed amendment to the state constitution will be introduced, giving the state broad power to provide far-reaching legislation for social welfare and to co-operate with the federal government. Governor Landon was quoted as describing the proposed amendment as "satisfactory."

The amendment, which may be the basis for similar action in other states, reads:

"Nothing contained in this constitution shall be construed to limit the power of the legislature to enact laws providing for financial assistance to aid infirm or dependent persons; for the public health; unemployment compensation and general social security and providing for the payment thereof by tax or otherwise and to receive aid from the federal government therefor."

Charles P. Taft and Ralph W. Robey, two members of his research and advisory staff, were scheduled to join the Republican Presidential nominee and to provide him with further data for the notification ceremony speech—the first major political statement since his Cleveland nomination.

In the meantime, John Hamilton, newly elected chairman of the Republican National committee, was on a tour of the East conferring with political leaders.

Strikes in Provinces Continue French Unrest

PERSISTENCE of strikes in the provinces kept France in a state of unrest. A gain of 225,000 new members was reported by the general confederation of labor, organized labor's official body.

Altogether it was estimated that 100,000 workers were still absent from their jobs, in spite of reports of strike settlements in scattered sections throughout the country.

The French Riviera witnessed a general exodus of foreign tourists from 450 hotels and resorts following a lockout by the proprietors. The hotels were closed indefinitely after the employers declared they could not meet workers' demands for more pay and shorter hours. This retaliation by the owners against the threat of a workers' strike upset the summer tourist season, one of the most profitable to the French.

Severe Drouth Damage Brings Federal Action

WITH thousands of acres of spring wheat destroyed through drouth and with vast corn-growing regions threatened, the federal government undertook a comprehensive campaign to alleviate human distress and property loss, and stricken areas were placed in the hands of a special drouth committee by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, with instructions to proceed immediately with a plan of co-ordination.

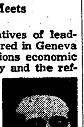
Secretary Wallace named Jess W. Tapp, assistant agricultural adjustment administrator, as chairman of the committee. Four others appointed were: C. W. Warburton, director of the Agricultural Extension Service; Hugh H. Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service; A. G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; and W. F. Callender, assistant agricultural adjustment administrator. Joseph L. Bailey, assistant resettlement administrator, will also serve with the committee.

The committee's attention was turned immediately to drouth conditions and relief need in North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana and Wyoming, but officials were watching anxiously the increasing drouth damage in South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and parts of Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas.

The work of six government agencies will be supervised and co-ordinated by the committee in its work on drouth relief. These are: the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation, the Rural Resettlement Administration, the Relief Administration, and Rural Rehabilitation and Soil Conservation Service.

League of Nations Meets to Lift Sanctions

WHILE representatives of leading powers gathered in Geneva to lift League of Nations economic sanctions against Italy and the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, of Ethiopia prepared to plead the cause of his nation's freedom, European statesmen considered the possibility of a reorganization and reformation of the League.



Haile Selassie

Observers agreed that while informal discussions on the League reformation would be held, it was probable that the question of reorganizing the international pact body would be postponed until September.

Steel Industry Resists Drive for Unionization

DEFYING a drive to force unionization of its 500,000 workers, the steel industry in a strongly worded statement issued by the American Iron and Steel institute declared "it will oppose any attempt to compel its employees to join a union or pay tribute for the right to work."

Although the statement did not mention him by name, it was regarded by observers as the first official response to the recent announcement by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, of a campaign to unionize steel employees.

In order to prevent the "closed shop," the industry said it "will use its resources to the best of its ability to protect its employees and their families from intimidation, coercion and violence and to aid them in maintaining collective bargaining free from interference from any source."

Reasserting its belief in the principles of collective bargaining, the industry's statement pointed out that employees now pick their own representatives for collective bargaining by secret ballot. The statement declares:

"The steel industry is recovering from six years of depression and huge losses and the employees are beginning to receive the benefit of increased operations. Any interruption of the forward movement will seriously injure the employees and their families and all business dependent upon the industry and will endanger the welfare of the country."

International Conference Seeks Mediterranean Peace

MEETING in Montreaux, Switzerland, an international conference sought settlement of military and naval problems in the Mediterranean. The conference had been called by the powers as a result of Turkey's request to fortify the Dardanelles, which were demilitarized under the Lausanne treaty of 1923.

The possible threat of Russia's growing naval strength caused an alignment of the British and Japanese. Japan announced it was willing to accept any limitation on Japanese warships authorized to enter the Black sea, providing similar restrictions were placed on Russian warships leaving it. Britain was believed to be supporting Japan's position.

Russia demanded free westward passage of warships and submarines out of the Black sea through the Dardanelles, adding she was unable to see why other powers not bordering on this body of water desired unlimited passage to it.

CIRCULAR STREETS IN OUR CAPITAL CONFUSE VISITORS

One thing that confuses many visitors to the National Capital, especially the motorists, is the many circles. How far around a circle do you go to hit the right street again is, indeed, a problem, unless you know your Washington circles. Some tourists, after running around in circles and getting lost several times, wonder why they made so many old circles anyway.

Washington's many circles have a real historical background. L'Enfant, the French engineer friend of George Washington, who laid out the plans for the National Capital drew his inspiration, it is said, from the circles of gay Paris. In that city where civil insurrections were then frequent it had been proven that circles at city intersections were quite useful as weapons of defense against the rebels. With one gun mounted in the center of a circle a few soldiers stationed there could control any and all of the various approaches to the circle.

Washington's circles now get the blame for much of the city's traffic problem. If the traffic authorities had their way, L'Enfant's beautiful circles would likely be squared.

Try Living Today

Gambling for future affluence is the most insidious form of future-fixation afflicting American males. It brought on the depression. It doesn't matter in the least whether a man dies a pauper or a millionaire. What does matter is how he lives and how his family lives.

Men who gamble for wealth often seek to justify themselves by the argument that wealth will bring happiness to their wives and children. This isn't true. Wealth and poverty are equally likely to prevent real living. The happiest people are those with enough money to live on and enough wisdom to use their money for that purpose.

A great many of those who answered the query as to what they lived for said that they were "just waiting to get money enough to travel." Yet the people who have traveled more than any other family I know have no money at all. They like to travel, and so they travel. Their other affairs are arranged to make traveling possible.—William Moulton Marston in Cosmopolitan.

"Stop fretting," Barry commanded "He'll be out in a month."

Barry's heart had gone out to Peggy and to her boy. A chorine with the domestic virtues of a clergyman's wife—that's what Peg was. "I'd like to give Pat a squint at the underdog she thinks she despises so," he thought.

The next morning there were two responses to the advertisement suggested by Evans. Barry wrote asking both applicants for the reward to call at his rooms. On the way to The Globe, he dropped in on Tim Laugherty.

Tim had been assigned to a new case now, and regarded the Kelly matter as a closed incident. Barry's zeal amused him. "What're you talking about?" he inquired with mock seriousness. "Kelly? We're at the Ziegfeld Follies, buddy."

Barry reported his interview with the Oriental.

Tim grinned; "We knew all about that ten days ago!"

He produced his records.

"There was a call at 8:16. That came from a hotel in the Forties—an actorine named Betty Barclay. Then there was three calls from Kelly's—at 8:22, 8:27 and 9:41. That first number's the house of a lawyer named Hood. Next comes the Yale club. And the third's a flat in Riverside drive."

"Whose?"

"I don't know."

"What about the call that came in while Rogers was there?"

"Boloney."

"You mean there wasn't any such call?"

"Not on my records. Of course, it might've been sent from a nickel-in-the slot booth. You can't trace them things. Listen, pal, you're on a wild-goose chase. This Rogers lad done it."

CHAPTER VI

Barry proceeded to The Globe, quite expecting to find his dismissal there.

"I'm going to draw down fifty bucks," he thought, "and what have I done for it?

But Ernie Harwood had caught the contagion for "sleuthing."

"The other papers have practically dropped it," he said. "Okay. We'll go on working quietly, and, some day, we'll turn up the story. It's good any time. And I'm dead sure now the cops have got the wrong party. Maybe they know it, too. Maybe they don't want to know who bumped off the big boss. What're you doing?"

Barry told him.

"Let's see those telephone numbers."

Standing over him, Barry pointed out that somebody had made two calls from Kelly's within eleven minutes after the receipt of the message from Betty Barclay. Harwood saw nothing remarkable about that. "But," Barry persisted, "who was 'somebody?' Kelly didn't get home till 11, the Filipino says. Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. Who called the Yale club, and the flat on Riverside drive?"

Harwood sent for a newspaper file.

"I thought so," he observed, his finger on one of its pages. "Betty Barclay's the dame Mrs. Kelly named when she was going to divorce Kelly."

Barry whistled.

"That might explain Mrs. Kelly calling a lawyer named Hood."

The city editor glanced back at the file.

"Especially since he was her lawyer. Gimme that big red book."

Barry obeyed.

Hood. Graduated from Yale. He wasn't at home, so they tried to get him at his club. Law firm: Hood & Loring. Gimme the telephone book. Just a hunch, but—Okay. The Riverside number's the home of Horace Loring. Somebody wanted legal advice that night, and wanted it bad."

"Who?"

"Use your imagination."

"Mrs. Kelly?"

"Sure, She took the call from Betty Barclay—"

"She didn't. The butler took it."

"All right. Then he gave it to her, and she went wild. You want to know why the Oriental's 'cagey.' Well, that's why. He's trying to shield Mrs. Kelly. What you've got to do now is to check up on that alibi."

They discussed ways and means. Also, they discussed Barry's other activities. Barry showed Ernie his advertisement, and the two responses. Harwood was skeptical.

"We might get the number of the taxi that killed the woman. What then? That was two hours after the murder. And, if you have the good fortune to get the taxi—the one that brought the midnight caller to Kelly's, if there was a midnight caller—how's the driver going to know who his fare was? No, son; that's beet-tops!"

Barry defended himself.

"You never can tell what you're going to get till you go after it."

Harwood was searching for that inevitable pipe.

"You're enthusiastic," he commented, "and that's something. In fact, it's everything. I figure getting anywhere as 5 per cent luck and 95 per cent enthusiasm. Now, beat it. I'm too busy for mathematics."

He smiled, almost as warmly and kindly as Winslow had done.

"You've got a nose for news," he went on. "When I hired you, I said you'd get a raise if you were worth it, and fired if you weren't. Well, I think you're worth a hundred a week."

"That's swell of you," Barry glowed, "but I don't see what I've done—"

Wednesday brought the desired letter from Bad Nauheim, and three more from gentlemen who hoped to receive the fifty-dollar reward. With these, as with their predecessors, Barry made appointments beginning at four o'clock Thursday. Mrs. Ridder's envelope contained a check drawn to her order by "the old man," and endorsed simply "Eleanor Ridder." "She's a good business woman," Barry said to himself, ironically.

It hadn't occurred to her to doubt the sender of that cablegram, or what he meant to do with the money. "Winslow'll take it," Barry told Peggy, "and take his retainer out of it. Then he can give us his check for the rest. Winslow's name'll be on this check when it's returned to the old man, and, of course, that's all right."

"What'll we do with Winslow's check?"

"Start a bank account in your name. Then I'll go to you when we need funds, and tell you what for. Give this letter to Jack, and tell him it ought to make him ashamed of himself."

It almost did. Even more than the communication Barry had shown him, this answered Jack's question as to whether his mother cared. "I'm so glad you've got work," she had written, "and so glad you're taking an interest in that boy. It shows I've always been right about you. And it will help you, too. We can't help others without helping ourselves—making character. I want to boast—to your father. He's no better, though. Worse, if anything. Goodness knows when we shall get back to America, and I'm so anxious to get back—now!"

The real Jack Ridder answered that letter without prompting, and the "fake" Jack Ridder posted the answer.

At three Thursday afternoon, he was in his rooms, preparing to quiz the reward-seekers. Barry had reason to know the ways of imposters.

The first caller was just that. "I was walking down Fifth avenue," he recounted, "and I happened to glance to my left. I saw the cab coming, lickety-split—"

"To your left?" Barry asked. "That would have been east. And Sixteenth street's for traffic from the west."

The second applicant was waiting by now—a lunch-counter clerk who'd run out of his place "to see what the excitement was about," but hadn't seen much. On his heels, came an exceptionally interesting Jehu. He was an M. D., he told Barry, "but business is bad, so I'm out to make a little."

"A little business?" Barry asked.

"Well, I haven't hit anyone yet."

He was thirty-five, neatly dressed, and wore glasses, and his English was pure and undefiled. Moreover, he had a scientific instinct for observation. "I saw the taxi," he said, "and the woman step off the curb. I knew the cab would hit her, and it did."

"Get the number?"

"Of course," the visitor answered. "Took it down as the runaway crossed in front of me."

He produced a prescription pad.

"026017."

Barry wrote it in the note-book to which he had transferred the number of Kelly's lost latch-key.

"How did you happen to be in lower Fifth avenue at that hour?" he asked.

"I went down—some time before—with a very singular person."

"Why do you say he was singular?"

"He acted strangely. At least, I thought so at the time. I picked him up in a tobacconist's shop a few minutes before twelve o'clock. 'Where do you want to go?' I asked him.

"'To a drug store,' he answered. "There's one in the Flatiron building, at Broadway and Twenty-third street. Take me there.'

"It seemed a long way to go for a drug store, but I supposed he knew someone, or wanted a special prescription. Anyway, it was none of my business, and I took him. He gave me a fifty-cent tip, and went into the Broadway entrance. Five minutes later, while I was wondering where to go next, I saw him walk out of the door that opened on Fifth avenue. I started back uptown.

"About half past one, I picked up a couple that wanted to go to the Brevoort, on Eighth street. I took 'em, and was making for Times square again when the traffic lights stopped me at Sixteenth. Then I saw the woman and the cab. The whole thing was over in a minute. The taxi struck her, went right up on the pavement, smashed a lamp-post, and kept going. But I got the number."

"Then, of course, I jumped out of my cab and went to the woman. She was beyond help, though. And, by this time, a policeman had turned up, and I decided to move on." He smiled. "A taxi-driver learns to avoid the constabulary."

"So you didn't give the cop that license number?"

"What for? The woman was dead, and arresting some poor, scared taximan wasn't going to do her any good. I started back to my cab, and whom should I bump into but the chap I'd driven to the drug store. He was coming out of Sixteenth street, so lost in himself that he hadn't even noticed the crowd. 'Hello,' I said. 'We seem to be meeting a lot tonight.'

"'Who are you?' he asked, curtly.

"'I'm the taxi-driver who took you to a drug store on Twenty-third street a couple of hours ago.'

"'I never saw you before in my life. You've made a mistake,' he said. 'I live in this street, and I've been home all evening. You never drove me anywhere.'

"'Have it your own way,' I said, and climbed into my buggy.

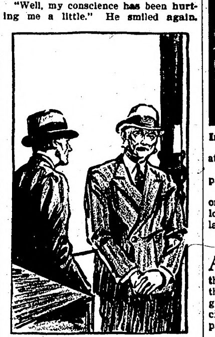
"I wasn't mistaken, and neither was he. He was in kind of a daze until he recognized me, and then he got almost hysterical. You'd've thought I'd accused him of murder."

The doctor rose from his chair.

"Maybe I'm doing that," he added. "There was a murder that night, you know; in that street. But, of course, you know. Your ad didn't fool me."

"Then why did you answer it?"

"Well, my conscience has been hurting me a little." He smiled again.



"Who Are You?" He Asked Curtly

"That's my number, and my name and address, if you want me."

"There's your fifty dollars."

"Thanks."

"I wish you could tell me more about your singular fare."

"I wish so, too, but I can't. I'd know him if I saw him again, but I'm not likely to see him."

"Would you mind leaving me a receipt for that money?" Barry asked.

"Certainly not."

"I like to have vouchers for what I pay out."

The doctor nodded, and went to the desk.

Barry was halted by an exclamation.

"What is it?" he asked.

The doctor turned to him.

"That's the man I saw in Sixteenth street," he said. "Believe it or not, that's the man."

In his hand was Barry's newspaper, with the picture of Judge Hambidge.

"I must see Pat at once," Barry thought.

What was he going to say to her? Six days before, she had given him a pretty plain warning to keep out of this. Barry no longer had any doubt of that. He had decided to do so, and then Willetts had reminded him that gentlemen didn't "abandon ladies in distress." Well, what was a gentleman to do now?

"Damn it," he raged; "I can't blame her for wanting to protect her own father! And it doesn't make the least difference, anyway. I'd go on loving her if she'd committed the murder!"

Once more, he asked himself what right he had to assume that either Pat or the Judge had anything to do with that murder. Pacing the floor, he reviewed all his evidence again, and reached a conclusion as to what it indicated. That brought him back to the idea of himself as Pat's ally. "If I can make her see that," he said. "She's got to come clean, though. And she will. When I can tell her about Peggy, and make her understand that the truth will clear that boy. And then we can get together to clear the Judge. There might have been a whole lot of reasons—decent ones—for his going to Kelly's that night."

Evans phoned at ten.

"I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur. His name's Nolan," Evans said, "and he don't talk much. We got pretty thick tonight, though."

"Suppose we start for home at nine in the morning," Barry said.

He was hungry, and tired of thinking, so he had a snack at the corner.

Precisely at nine the next morning, he called Pat and told her he was coming. "Something important's happened," he said.

"Why not lunch with us?" Pat suggested.

"We're lucky if we get out by two," Barry told her. "And, anyway, I want to see you alone."

"I'll expect you at two," she said.

Evans was waiting, and full of his evening with Nolan. "I didn't dare ask a question," Evans reported. "He's the suspicious kind. I think he drinks, though, and a fellow that drinks is bound to loosen up some day."

"Buy him all he can hold," Barry counseled.

Conversation lapsed after that. Evans' passenger was rehearsing his part of the coming interview. "I'll bet she knows now what it's about," he speculated.

And she did.

"Come in," Pat invited, leading the way to the drawing room.

Pat indicated a chair. "Sit there," she bade him. "It's awfully warm for June."

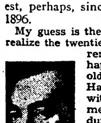
What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—So soon as this, with both tickets just put up, folks already are saying this is starting out to be a bitter campaign—the bitterest, perhaps, since away back in 1896.

My guess is these prophets don't realize the twentieth part of it. I'm reminded of what happened when my old friend, Col. Bill Hayward, sailed with his negro regiment for France during the war.



Irvin S. Cobb

The outfit embarked at night. Next morning, when the transport was well out at sea a pop-eyed trooper from the interior South stood staring at the endless watery expanse.

"Boy!" he exclaimed to a companion, "dis sho' is one big ocean!"

"Mos' doubtless," stated the second soldier, "but, son, whut you's lookin' at now is only jes de top layer."

The Union Party

AT CLEVELAND there was harmony and a quiet interment for the old Guard. At Philadelphia the proceedings moved along on greased rollers. But for real excitement, wait until that new Union party holds its convention.

Then will be the signal to remove the women and children to a place of safety. Just consider who'll be there:

The inflationists who think that, as long as we have government engraving plants and printing presses, money should be plentiful. The group committed to the idea that, if the farmer won't do something for himself, something should be done for the farmer. Doctor Townsend, with his project to provide old age pensions for everybody over sixty except Congressman McGoarty. Father Coughlin, calling for social justice and better radio hookups. Huey Long's successor, who'd share the wealth and make every man a king.

• • •

Al Smith's Strategy

AS AN old-time headliner of political vaudeville, Al. Smith should have known better than to pull that ancient wheeze—shooting at Philadelphia letter carriers on a Sunday afternoon.

And besides, think of the desperate chance he and his supporting quartet of sharpshooters took: come between a mother panther and her cubs; come between a Frenchman and his fracas; come between a radio announcer and his elocution, but never, right on the eve of their national convention, try to come between a flock of office-holding Democrats and the prospect of four more uninterrupted years of the same.

Trouble of Travelers

OUTSIDE the larger cities, when a hotel manager wishes to show a special guest special attention, he assigns him to the bed-chamber of state which usually is on the second floor, invariably is at the front of the house and nearly always on the corner where electric signs twinkle merrily till daylight in the poor sleepless wretch's eyes.

And along toward 2 a. m. a party named Dewey, standing in the street below, will start telling a party named Pink, about sumpin mighty comical that's come up Sad'day night whereupon Pink will be moved to recall a few social reminiscences of his own.

Convention Invocations

ALTHOUGH a southerner—however, not working at the trade as steadily as some—I have to snicker when a Democratic senator walks out on his own convention because a colored preacher asks the divine blessing on its deliberations. Which reminds me:

The first time that great Texan, Jim Hogg, ran for the governorship his party split. The bolters joined with the Republican outfit—mostly black—to put up a fusion ticket.

At this pinto convention, the Rev. 'Sin Killer'' Griffin, a famous black evangelist, delivered the invocation. In concluding, he threw an unexpected bombshell into the piebald ranks by earnestly urging the Lord to Put Hogg in the governor's chair

Terrific uproar ensued. Finally a dusky stalwart got the floor.

"I moves," he bellowed, "dat dis yere traitorsome and on-Republikin prayer be expunged from de record."

Majestically, 'Sin Killer'' erected himself.

"I rises," he stated, "to a p'int of order. It's too late to expunge frum de record a prayer which already done got to heaven more'n five minutes ago."

Just Thirty-Five Cents

By PEARL HOLLOWAY

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

LENA BURNS, recently appointed social service secretary, looked up with interest. It was unusual for anyone to knock on the door here.

It came again, a short, indecisive rap. Timidity was not customary in the welfare office. Curiosity overcame her. "Come in," she called, wondering what type of appeal would be made this time.

The knob turned. A tiny crack resulted. Little by little the crack widened. A head appeared. A battered brown derby, tipped far back, revealed thin brown hair plastered over a low forehead. Faded blue eyes were almost hidden by thick glasses. Apologetically, a man limped into the room, removing his hat and toying with it nervously as he approached the desk. His glance wandered from the stenographer to the secretary. He bowed several times and cleared his throat. "Could I," he began tremulously, "could I—" and then with great effort, "could I borrow thirty-five cents?"

She smiled unofficially. "Such a request is out of the ordinary," she remarked, ignoring the stenographer's glances. "What's your name?"

"Bill Sykes, ma'am," he answered, still twirling his hat and bowing, "and I ain't never had to ask for nothing before."

The stenographer coughed warningly. Lena reached for her own purse. "I'll risk it," she decided, handing him the change.

He bowed still more profoundly. "I don't know how to thank you, ma'am," he stammered. "I'm an honest man, and I'll pay you back. I swear I will."

Some days later Bill Sykes put some grimy coins on the secretary's desk with the cheerful announcement, "I brung back your money."

All of Lena's faith in humanity showed in her smile, a faith that was intensified as he broke out with: "Could you—would you—do you know where I could get a job?

With her most professional manner she referred to the file, produced a card and gave minute directions for reaching the employment agency.

"If there were more like Bill Sykes," Lena said to herself some mornings later as she scrubbed the supply table preparatory to stocking it for the day's demands, "it would be easier to carry on." Even Bill Sykes wasn't welcome at this particular moment.

"Good morning," he apologized, "I just thought I'd drop in and see—"

"What about the job?" she interrupted, her hands busy with scouring powder and brush.

He hesitated, and his glance fell. "Well, I—you see—" he floundered, "I—I only worked half a day, Miss Burns."

"Well, what do you want now?" Steel was replacing friendliness.

He drew nearer. "Could you—could you loan me just thirty-five cents again?"

"Again?" Miss Burns faced him squarely. "Say, this isn't a loan office." By this time she had lost all patience with him. "Get out!" she ordered. "Go on back to your wood cutting. I don't mind loaning people money occasionally, but there's a limit to human endurance." She scrubbed industriously for a moment or so, and then she thought better of her decision. "All right," she said, "what do you need it for?" She looked around, but Bill Sykes had gone.

* * * * * * * *

A week went by. Miss Burns was checking up on some of the people for whom she had found jobs.

"No," the clerk said, "Sykes don't work here any more. In fact, he don't work nowhere. He's dead. Got hit by a truck last Tuesday morning. . . . Say, your name don't happen to be Lena Burns, does it?"

"Yes, I'm Miss Burns."

"Well, now; I'm right glad I thought to ask. I helped take Sykes to the hospital and on the way up he told me to have Lena Burns call Sunset 4500, whatever number that is. . . . No, ma'am. I don't know what for. Just said call that number, then when we got to the hospital I see he was dead."

Miss Burns dialed the number.

"Oh, yes, Miss Burns. William Sykes carried a five-hundred-dollar accident policy with us. Several days ago he made you the beneficiary. I'm sorry, though; it's void. You see, he paid a weekly premium of thirty-five cents and last week he neglected to make his payment."

Politics for Profit

Politician—I can get you a soft job at $3,000 a year but, of course that means you split with me—you get $2,000 and I $1,000.

Worker—That's sure fine. I s'pose I'll have an assistant to do the work, won't I?

Politician—Sure, and we'll split his salary three ways for the three of us.

IT WAS the last wish of Marshal Pilsudski, "Maker of Modern Poland," that his heart be buried next to his mother's grave in Vilna. The wish was carried out on the day of mourning for Poland's national hero. In this picture at Rossa cemetery Madame Pilsudski is holding the casket containing the marshal's heart.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

WHAT BOBBY COON AND BILLY MINK DID

BOBBY COON and Billy Mink sat on an old log on the bank of the Laughing Brook and talked over the traps Billy Mink had discovered and what should be done about them.

"Of course," said Billy Mink, "you and I are safe enough. We know exactly where those traps are and we are not going to be so foolish as to get caught in one of them. But there are others who travel up and down the Laughing Brook who might not discover the traps until too late."

Bobby Coon nodded. "Just what I was thinking," said he. "But for you, Billy Mink, I would be in that trap down there this very minute. It was stupid of me not to have suspected that the little opening in that fence was left purposely to tempt whoever came along to go through it instead of taking the trouble to climb that steep bank and go around the fence. There may be others just as stupid. We ought to do something about it, but what can we do?"

"Are you afraid to go near that trap?" demanded Billy.

Bobby scratched his head thoughtfully. "How near?" he asked.

"Near enough to get your paw under it," replied Billy.

"I don't know," replied Bobby. "What good will that do?"

"Well, you see," replied Billy, "that trap is set right in the middle of that little opening and it has been covered with wet, dead leaves. Now I know something about traps. I've seen a lot of them in my day. If anyone should step on those wet leaves, two steel jaws would snap up and grab him by the leg. But those steel jaws always snap up. They can't snap the other way. If your paw is underneath the trap there is no danger. By doing this you can lift that trap up so that it will no longer be covered with those dead leaves, and whoever comes along will see it. It isn't safe to try to pull the leaves off of it because you might get caught doing it. If you will do that to the trap on this side I will do the same thing to the trap on the other side of the Laughing Brook. If you're afraid, just say so, and I'll take care of both traps."

"All Right, Let's Get Busy," Cried Billy Mink, Jumping Up.

Now Bobby Coon was afraid because, you see, he had never had anything to do with traps. But he wasn't willing to own up that he was afraid. He knew that if he showed that he was afraid he never would hear the end of it, for Billy Mink would be sure to tell everybody he knew. He thought the matter over for a few minutes and then grunted: "I guess if you can do it, I can."

"All right, let's get busy!" cried Billy Mink, jumping up. "I don't want to spend the rest of the night sitting around here."

So Billy Mink swam across the Laughing Brook, and Bobby Coon slowly shuffled along on his side down toward the little fence where the trap was set.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

THREE GOOD RECIPES

HERE is a nice relish which may be made in any season and is especially good with fowl:

Relish Salad.

Pour two cupfuls of boiling water over a package of lemon gelatin, stir thoroughly until dissolved. Add one cupful of chopped cabbage, one-half cupful each of chopped celery and stuffed olives, one-fourth teaspoonful each of paprika and salt, two tablespoonfuls each of sugar, vinegar and chopped pickles. Cool before adding the vegetables but the seasonings may be added to the gelatin at once. Set away to mold. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Date Cake.

This is a moist, nice cake: Pour one cupful of boiling water over two-thirds of a cupful of dates and cook slowly one minute. Stir constantly. Beat one egg and add one cupful of sugar and one tablespoonful of melted butter, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of nuts, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg, two and one-third cupfuls of flour with one teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat both mixtures together two minutes. Pour into a loaf pan and bake forty minutes. Line the pan with waxed paper.

Stir buttered bread crumbs into a lemon filling and use for dessert. It takes the place of lemon pie and will satisfy those who cannot eat pastry.

Fruit Cake.

This is a good cake to have for any occasion and as it keeps well it may be prepared at any time: Cream one cupful of butter with two cupfuls of sugar. Add four well beaten eggs, two-thirds of a cupful of orange juice and three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice; beat well for two minutes, then add two teaspoonfuls each of vanilla and cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of salt and cloves, one cupful each of chopped candied pineapple, orange peel and raisins, one-fourth cupful of citron, one-half cupful of almonds finely chopped and four cupfuls of flour with a teaspoonful of soda. Bake in two loaf cake pans for one and one-half hours.

THE MAGIC BALLOON

This trick is a real surprise. To start with, the magician holds a top balloon which is red in color. He touches the surface of the balloon with a pin.

Bang! The balloon explodes, but instead of disappearing it remains. The singular thing about it is the color of the balloon. It has changed from red to green.

You need two balloons for this trick. Beforehand, push the green balloon inside the red one. Inflate the green balloon and bind the end. Stretch the mouth of the red balloon and inflate it a trifle more than the green.

The result is an air pocket between the red surface and the green. The pin point explodes the red and its pieces fly from sight behind the green.

THE HEART HAS NEEDS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHAT is the profit of all our toil?
We need the grain of the fertile soil,
But a man will find, as the road he goes,
That now and then he will need a rose.

We need the corn of the rolling land,
But now and then we shall need a hand;
To the heart of man there will come an hour
When he needs the sight of a blooming flow'r.

Yes, God has given us rose and grain,
And I think his purpose is mighty plain:
Whatever our aim, our wish, our goal,
We must feed the body, but feed the soul.

For, after all, it's the friends we make,
And the joy we share, and the joy we take,
And the good we do, and the good that's given,
That make the earth seem a bit like heaven!

"SHOOTING FISH" OF SIAM REAL EXPERTS

Piscatorial Freaks Could Teach Naval Gunners.

New York.—In the waters somewhere east of Suez, lives a "shooting fish" that can give naval gunners a lesson or two when it comes to markmanship. This strange creature, known as the "archer fish," lives largely on insects which it shoots from overhanging branches with bullets of water.

Even cigarettes have been extinguished by these marine sharpshooters, according to Hugh M. Smith, former fisheries advisor to the Kingdom of Siam. During his stay in the East, Mr. Smith studied these fish in the Philippines, French Indo-China, Siam, Malaya, Burma and India.

"Wild fish planted in a large pond in the compound of my residence in Bangkok were under close observation for a number of years," writes Mr. Smith in "Natural History" published by the American museum.

Most Efficient.

"Of the oriental fresh-water fishes with which I am acquainted in the wild state, none gives such an impression of intelligence and efficiency as does Toxotes (the archer fish). This impression grows on an observer as he notes the purposeful way in which a fish moves about in a stream, canal, or pond; the zeal and thoroughness with which it explores aquatic and overhanging land plants for insects; the high development of its sense of sight in both air and water; the skill displayed in dislodging insects and seizing them as they fall into the water; the alertness in avoiding danger; and the readiness in adapting itself to life in small ponds and responding to the attentions of persons who provide food.

"A friend of mine, a distinguished scion of the royal family of Siam, and an ardent student of fishes, had a residence on the broad Menam Chao Phya above Bangkok and used to entertain American and European guests with shooting-fish performances. A veranda on which he took many of his meals was directly over the water, and under it Toxotes could be found almost daily, attracted by scraps of fish, meat, chicken, and prawn which were regularly thrown from the table. By means of a spider or cricket dangled on a black thread from the end of a short bamboo pole, the shooting fish could readily be induced to display their marksmanship, I sometimes saw spent watery pellets splash on the ceiling of the veranda 10 to 12 feet about the river, and witnessed many other exhibitions which confirmed my respect for the intelligence and skill of Toxotes.

Extinguish Cigarettes.

"On two occasions to my personal knowledge, when my friend sat on the veranda eating his breakfast, reading a newspaper, smoking a cigarette, and apparently neglectful of his fish wards, his attention was attracted by well-directed shots which extinguished his cigarette.

"The force with which the watery pellets may strike an object is sometimes most astonishing to a human observer. An insect may be knocked high in the air or may fall on the bank beyond a fish's reach. At short range the drops may strike a person's face with a distinctly stinging sensation. On many occasions, during exhibitions in Siam, a spider at the end of a thread hanging from the end of a pole was knocked far up on the thread or even over the pole. Spent shots could be heard to splash against the roof of a veranda over the water."

Honolulu Prison Uses Flogging on 2 Inmates

Honolulu.—Flogging has been reintroduced at Oahu prison recently, reopening a controversy concerning corporal punishment.

With the prison board's approval, Acting Warden Joseph Ordenstein ordered thirty lashes each be laid across the backs of Charles Cooper and Julian Eugster, incorrigible inmates.

The punishment is being spread over an extended period. The convicts first received six lashes each with a cat-o'-nine-tails made of knotted rope. If their behavior does not improve, they will be flogged periodically until the thirty lashes are administered.

The flogging recalled the celebrated Lucas Candido case of 1929. After twice escaping from prison, Candido was ordered flogged. The case went into the Territorial Circuit court on habeas corpus proceedings to enjoin prison authorities.

As a further inducement for a large turnout, refreshments are served at the cemetery. Thus the organization is ahead $12.70 and free meals for members who attend. As for the company, the high pressure salesmen who make their appearance after the luncheon, look after its interests. The scheme must be profitable since it has been in operation for some time.

Incidentally, suburban housewives never visit the establishment on Thursdays. If they did they would meet their maids because Thursday is the servants' day out. For that reason, also, most of the Westchester clubs, with family memberships, have their big meal on Thursday instead of Sunday night.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"Death Straddles the Fences"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

TODAY, boys and girls, Dave Sherin takes the floor. Dave lives in New York city. "I met with my adventure in Ireland," he writes, "and strange to say, it didn't have to do with the Black and Tan revolution or anything like that. I had my adventure with a horse."

A horse. That's the answer to almost anything in Dave's life. Dave doesn't remember the time when he wasn't on a horse and going somewhere. Back in 1924, when his adventure happened, he was a steeplechase rider. And a more dangerous sport doesn't exist, unless it's playing post office with a roomful of man-eating tigers.

Dave had been riding steeplechases and hurdle races for two years over in England when, one September day in 1924, he set out for Ireland for a two months' vacation and a whiff of good Limreick air.

His home was in Kilmallock, and he'd only been there a couple days when a neighboring farmer brought him a high-spirited, half-bred colt and asked Dave to break him to the saddle.

Unbroken Colt Has Wicked Gleam in His Eye.

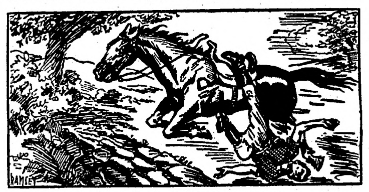
"The horses I'd been dealing with for the two years before had all been full-blooded 'chasers,'" says Dave, "and I looked on this new horse as being a very soft job indeed. I was wrong. My first inkling of the mettle of that colt came the first time I entered the stable. I was no sooner inside than he began to lash out in all directions. He practically kicked me out the door.

"I decided then that he'd been spoiled by bad handling, and set about coaxing him into a better frame of mind. After a few days he seemed to respond to my efforts and I put the 'tack' or breaking-in equipment on him. By that time I had forgotten the first reception he gave me. I should have been warned, though, by the wicked gleam that was still in his eye."

Well, sir, Dave had the harness on him, and for a few days he let him buck all the hellishness out of his system around the corral. Then one day, he saddled the colt and took him for a canter. For all of three miles, that animal was gentle as a lamb. But finally they came to a field where three or four young horses were grazing, and the sight of those horses seemed to infuriate Dave's mount.

Dave Goes for a Wild Ride Upside Down.

"He quivered a moment," says Dave, "and pushed his head down as far as he could. Then, suddenly, he swung it sharply around, ending up with it under my right stirrup, and at the same moment he plunged sideways, to the left. His sudden action unseated me, and as my left foot slipped from its stirrup I fell across his back to leftward.



The Plunging Colt Headed for the Boundary Fence.

"But my right foot held fast in its stirrup, and there I was, slung at the furious animal's side, my right leg sticking up in the air and the back of my head hanging an inch from the ground."

And with Dave dangling at his side, standing on his head on empty air, that wild colt started. Off he went, hell-for-leather across the open field.

Dave's Cranium Bumps the Ground at Every Stride.

"At each long stride he took," says Dave, "my head hit the ground and his hoofs grazed my skull. I have never been in a tighter corner in my life, but strange to relate, my head remained clear and my thoughts connected. I knew he was heading for the boundary fence at the other side of the field, and I never expected to cross it alive. Dangling at his side as I was, I must inevitably hit that fence. Then, if I wasn't smashed lifeless, I'd be a lot tougher than I ever thought any human could be."

On the colt galloped, crossing that field in a length of time that was all too short to suit Dave. Now the fence loomed up before him. Now the colt was falling back on his haunches for the jump.

It all took place in the twinkling of an eye, but to Dave, whose mind was racing with the agony of the doomed, it seemed like slow motion. The colt rose into the air—and the incredible happened. That horse didn't jump that fence. He flew over it like a bird, carrying Dave's head well over the top of the barrier and letting it down on the other side.

Colt's Somersault Saves Rider's Life.

"Then we were in the open again," Dave says, "and he was galloping faster than ever. Across another fence and another he went, clearing them with room to spare every time. And still he kept on, as I swung under his belly, my head brushing the tops of the blades of grass and his hoofs beating a tattoo on the side of my cranium. Then, through the lashing legs I caught a glimpse of a solidly built wall ahead and knew that the most dangerous leap in County Limerick barred his way.

"It was a stone wall, five feet high that dropped away six feet on the other side to a dyke 20 feet across. It's all over now, I thought to myself, and I still remember that I forgot to say a prayer. Then the wall seemed to be rushing toward me and I could feel the colt bracing himself for a great effort. He rose in the air, and the last thing I remembered was a crash like a ton of bricks falling about my ears—"

Dave awoke three days later, and they told him of the miracle that had saved his life. The colt's front feet had struck the wall, and he had turned a complete somersault—the one sort of spill that could possibly have saved Dave.

Llama, Beast of Burden, Used by American Indian

The llama has the distinction of being the only beast of burden that the American Indians were in possession of when America was discovered, observes a writer in the Rural New-Yorker. The peculiar conformation of its feet enables it to tread with security over rough and steep slopes where other animals would find it difficult walking. And then, camel-like, it is capable of making long journeys without water.

The llama is not a fast traveler, for the average distance is from a dozen to 15 miles a day when transporting merchandise, as it is distinctly a beast of burden, yet it supplies the Indian of South America his supply of wool for clothing, fresh meat, though coarse, leather, bone and his fuel, as the manure when dry is burned.

Here is one very peculiar trait of the llama: He carries a burden of from 100 to 125 pounds. If he is overloaded, he simply resents the imposition by walking out to the side of the road, lies down, and there is no persuasion and no punishment that can be administered to him that will induce him to change his obstinate decision!

When you look at a llama, you are beholding one of the most interesting animals of history, for when the great Inca Empire flourished from the Maule River in Chile and the Oasis of Mendoza to the Northern Andes of Ecuador, the llama was their beast of burden.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Smith Bolt

Washington.—The arrival of the first robin does not guarantee the immediate arrival of spring but when the first robin is observed, folks generally consider that there is little left of winter. An out and out bolt by an individual in party politics likewise does not guarantee important defections, but, like the arrival of the early robin, an individual bolter, if he be a man of consequence, has a story of its own to tell. A bolt in party politics never attracts attention unless the bolting individual is of some consequence and, therefore, has a personal following. Thus it is that when we observe a bolt by a nationally known individual from his lifelong political affiliation, we immediately understand its significance. The scope of this significance, however, is the thing that concerns us.

Nearly everyone knows now that former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, has made known that he cannot support President Roosevelt for re-election. They know as well that the four other individuals who asked the Democratic National convention to push Mr. Roosevelt aside and nominate a Democrat can be classified as important individuals along with Governor Smith. No one dare say that former Sen. James A. Reed of Missouri, former Governor Ely of Massachusetts, Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state in Woodrow Wilson's administration and Daniel F. Cohalan, one time Tammany chieftain, are unimportant in politics. They have consistently figured in Democratic party councils and thus it becomes apparent that these five robins presage something more than just their own departure from the ranks of Roosevelt supporters.

I make this statement notwithstanding the declaration by James A. Farley that he would not dignify their statement with a reply. Of course, Mr. Farley as postmaster general, chairman of the Democratic National committee, chairman of the New York State Democratic committee and delegate to the Democratic National convention, necessarily was a very busy man at the time the Smith statement, refusing support to President Roosevelt, was released for publication. Nevertheless, I am in a position to know that the Smith statement threw quite a scare into New Deal ranks. Frankly, they did not like it.

How much they do not like the Smith statement remains to be seen. I believe that no one can forecast exactly how much strength this group can pull away from Mr. Roosevelt in the November election. Much will depend upon their personal activities henceforth. If men like Smith and Jim Reed and Ely take the stump, if they go out onto the hustings and actually campaign for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, it seems to me obvious that such campaigning will damage the Roosevelt cause materially.

It was the natural strategy for Mr. Farley to follow in declining comment on the Smith defection. His assertion that the Smith statement was so unimportant as to require no reply will be convincing to a very great many voters who already have made up their minds to support Mr. Roosevelt. But the truth is that the election has not been won yet by either side and any votes that are influenced by such a group as that headed by Governor Smith will have weight in the final determination of our next President.

* * *

Lemke Third Party

The Smith defection becomes the more important in my opinion because it occurred almost simultaneously with the development of a third party under the leadership of Rep. William Lemke, of North Dakota. This picture may not be entirely clear to everyone. It is substantially this: Lemke and his colleagues are attempting to draw together the extreme radicals, the leftist groups. The bulk of these will come from the Democratic party if the Lemke organization develops any particular strength. The Smith group represents the conservative, or rightist, element in the Democratic party. Thus we see detraction from the Roosevelt strength on two sides.

I do not mean to say here that the combination of these circumstances will insure President Roosevelt's defeat. Anyone who would make such a declaration at this time demonstrates his lack of knowledge of political maneuvers. What I am seeking to show, however, is that robins have arrived in the back yard and in the front yard of the New Deal party and if the leaders of the two obstreperous groups engage viciously in this campaign, the time may come when Mr. Farley will recognize their importance.

There already has been evidence of the influence of the Lemke radical segment. I think everyone agrees that the announcement of the third party's organization vitally affected the type of platform that was written in Washington and adopted by the Democratic convention at Philadelphia. From many sources comes information that the Democratic platform was made much more liberal—some critics describe it as more socialistic—than would have been the case had Representative Lemke stayed out of the political picture. He has the backing of Father Coughlin, the Detroit radio priest, and his national union for social justice and he has the backing of the remnants of the late Huey Long's share-the-wealth adherents. In addition, the Townsend $200-a-month pension followers will be found behind Lemke to some extent.

I have observed these third party movements many times before and usually they have failed to live up to expectations. They nearly always have developed fights among themselves because the very nature of and the very reason for their existence lies in their varied conceptions of what government ought to be or ought to do. Their sincerity precludes them usually from compromise and when politicians refuse to compromise, their organization, whatever it may be, naturally disintegrates.

This may be the year when the leftist segment will stick together and if it does, it naturally threatens Mr. Roosevelt's success. I confidently expect to see overtures seeping out from New Deal sources in an effort to placate some of the Lemke followers. It is a logical piece of strategy for the New Dealers to seek to wean these recalcitrant folks from the third party.

Trouble in Europe

The European disturbances continue apace. It is a situation that is extremely interesting and one that probably will unfold as the weeks go by, in curious ways. I say curious because to us in America, it has been rather difficult to understand the meaning of many of the maneuvers that followed the outright subjugation of Ethiopia by the power thirsty Mussolini of Italy.

Word that comes rather direct from inner councils in Europe indicates a tremendous fear on the part of Italy and France about German plans. The British likewise are displaying nervousness and the present alliances and combinations of power existing in Europe are none too stable. It is just possible that Germany's Hitler may, by his present activities, force a new cementing of these alliances and understandings among other powers but at this time there is no mistaking the fact that Europe, outside of Germany, is a bundle of nerves.

It seems that the basis for this nervousness is rooted in the clever scheming of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, who is something of an economic dictator under Hitler. Dr. Schacht is a brilliant negotiator. He understands economics, trade and finance as well as any man in Europe today and when you couple such knowledge with diplomatic keenness, you obviously have a man capable of accomplishing results.

Dr. Schacht is employing the methods he knows best, namely, economic understandings, in making new connections with central European power and the Balkan states.

* * *

Italy's Case

In the case of Italy, an economic weapon in the hands of Germany might easily prove disastrous because Italy virtually exhausted her gold reserve in the late war and her government cannot go on much longer in furnishing purchasing power for her people. France has been able to open certain markets to the little entente and to the Balkans and has, in addition, provided some financial aid. Thus, when Dr. Schacht pats the neighbors of Germany, on the back and points out where markets can be made for them in Germany, France and Italy quickly develop cases of jitters.

It seems that Austria and Hungary cannot depend fully on Italian markets because of the low gold reserve in Italy. In the meantime as well, France has been losing millions in gold as her own domestic situation has been embroiled in a political whirlpool. The Austrians and the Hungarians and some of the other central Europeans recognize that unless France gets straightened out, there will not be purchasing power available there for their surplus produce. So, Dr. Schacht is cultivating what appears from this distance to be a fertile field.

Keep Young Pigs Away From Worms

Better Than to Doctor Them After They Have Become Infested.

By H. W. TAYLOR, Extension Swine Specialist, North Carolina State College.
WNU Service.

Plow up that wormy old hog lot and plant it to some crop. Roundworms are very injurious to young pigs. It is better to keep them away from worms than to dose them with worm medicine after they have become infested.

A few days before farrowing time scrub the sow thoroughly with a brush, using soap and warm water to remove dirt and worm eggs. Then put the sow in a clean field containing a suitable forage crop where there have been no hogs for at least 12 months.

Keep other pigs and hogs away from the clean lot, and keep new born pigs away from old, dirty hog lots. Leave the pigs on pasture until they are at least four months old. If possible, leave them there until ready for market or until they can be turned into the corn fields.

For summer pasture, plant soy beans in rows, cultivate them twice, and turn in the pigs when the beans are about 12 inches high.

Pigs after being farrowed should be castrated, weaned, and started on full feed two months later. Fill the self-feeder with shelled corn and fish meal or tankage so the pigs can help themselves.

When cottonseed meal is cheap, it may be mixed with the fish meal or tankage in equal parts. Soy bean meal or peanut meal may be used in place of cottonseed meal in the mixture.

Corn should not be mixed with other feeds. Put it in a separate compartment in the feeder.

All pigs and hogs should have access to a mineral mixture made up of ten pounds of superphosphate, ten pounds of lime, and two pounds of salt.

30 to 40 Leaves Needed to Produce Good Peach

How many leaves are required to produce enough food to develop a good peach? Experiments by the United States Department of Agriculture indicate at least 30 to 40 leaves are necesssary. Forty to fifty leaves are required to develop a good-sized apple, and about 50 for an orange.

Producers of large peaches provide larger leaf areas—more than 40 leaves per peach—by thinning the fruit closely. This permits the peaches left on the tree to get more food from the leaves. When the fruit set is light for the entire tree—but perhaps heavy on certain branches and the leaves plentiful—the fruit may be left unthinned.

After a damaging freeze fruit may set only at the base of the shoots When this occurs the leaves on the bearing and nonbearing shoots will under favorable conditions produce peaches of good size and quality although the fruit may be only a few inches apart.

Change Color of Onions

Science has taken another stride forward in saving the farmer thousands of dollars a year by "painting" onions a golden-brown color. Minerals are used instead of ordinary paints and the onions grow golden brown in color with thick skins instead of a lemon yellow with thin skins. The painting is done with the application of copper sulphate on muck soil, according to Prof. J. E. Knott of Cornell university. Farmers, the professor said, found it difficult to sell their onions as long as they remained a lemon-yellow color with thin skins.

Cow Barn Fertilizer

The liquid from a cow barn can be applied as a stimulant to the garden, but it will not take the place of a complete fertilizer, according to an authority. Its composition will probably vary. It is applied to hurry growth. It should not be used when the ground is dry, as the roots might take it up so rapidly as to cause injury. Apply when the soil is moist, after a rain. It is usually given at intervals of two weeks; there should be rain or irrigation between applications.

Growth of Corn

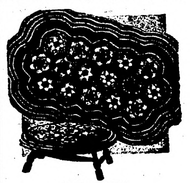
Corn probably grows most rapidly on warm nights. According to the United States bureau of plant industry, the rate of growth is influenced by many factors other than the formation of food materials through protosynthesis, and the protosynthetic products themselves may require further change before being utilized in growth. Some plants actually grow more rapidly at night under ordinary conditions than they do during the day.

The Hay Supply

While grass and legumes are important from the standpoint of soil improvement, they are equally as important in producing adequate fodder for live stock. Too often farm animals suffer from insufficient hay or pasture when a little planning and seeding would have provided ample. Yields vary considerably, but hay, if properly cured or stacked, will keep in good condition for many years, so it is possible to put up a surplus hay in good years.

Crochet That Is New and Quite Simple to Do

"Can anyone do it?" Most assuredly! It is a lovely rug, a matching foot-stool top or pillow for quick crocheting. Easy, six-sided medallions are done one by one, each flower a different color with background uniform or not, as you please. Sew them together and you're ready to begin the border crochet, going round and round with stripes of color used to break the background. Rug wool, rags or candlewicking may be used.



Pattern 5544

In pattern 5544 you will find complete instructions for making the rug shown; an illustration of it and of all stitches needed; material requirements; color suggestions.

What Goes On at Home

No wonder people sometimes believe houses are haunted. When we are away for a day or a week the fire and the lights go out, the house flies, the chimney sweeps, the clock strikes, the pillow slips, the mirror reflects, the tea leaves, the ice melts, the butter runs, the iron is sad and the moth balls. How do we know? Why, the meat saw sawed it.—Pathfinder Magazine.

BOYS GOVERN THIS NEBRASKA TOWN

Its Name Is Boys Town, and Its Guiding Star, Father Flanagan, Has Given 4,000 Homeless Urchins a Fair Chance in Life.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

TEN miles west of Omaha, Neb., there is a community with the romantic name of Boys Town. It is just as romantic as its name, for, with the exception of a handful of supervising oldsters, it is peopled entirely by boys of sixteen or less. It has a boy mayor, a boy chief of police and it is governed by an elected commission of boys who live there.

Boys Town! It sounds like something manufactured in a dream! It is.

"Upon entering Boys Town, a boy realizes that he is stepping into a new world," says its high school sophomore mayor, Dan Kampan. "And," His Honor adds, "that boy realizes that this new world will be just what he makes of it."

The dream that became Boys Town had its beginning some twenty years ago, in the mind of a young Catholic priest, Edward J. Flanagan, then newly ordained. He became interested in the derelicts and misfits who were inmates of the Omaha city jail and, with the spirit of the true humanitarian, practiced such kindnesses upon them that they began to confide in him. In the pity of their life stories was born the mission to which Father Flanagan has since committed himself.

Fed Hungry Misfits.

He visited more sinners against society in the police courts, until he decided to help the miscreants keep out of jail by providing them food and shelter in the cold winter months and trying to steer them back to the ways of righteousness and happiness. It was an overwhelming task, for many of them were hopeless drunks and dope fiends and some even criminals.

"But in our working men's shelter, a hungry man was just a hungry man," says Father Flanagan. "We asked no questions. At times we sheltered and fed as many as 500 of them in a single night. The accommodations we were able to give them were pitifully inadequate. There just wasn't the money. Humanity so easily forgets that men are their brothers' keepers. It was discouraging work, but with the aid of God we persevered. Funds to carry on were scraped together wherever we could get them."

The priest and his friends began to study their guests, in an attempt to discover the causes that lay at the bottom of their troubles. Complete case histories were kept on 2,000 of them, until it became apparent that most of them were the result of neglected or homeless childhoods. Father Flanagan and his associates concluded that if they were to save men of this type they must begin with the grass roots and save them as children. That was the beginning of the dream of Boys Town.

With a borrowed capital of $90 the first month's rent was paid on a house in Omaha, and in it to live went Father Flanagan and five boys, two of them newsboys who had been sleeping in the working men's shelter and the others boys who had been entrusted to his care by the juvenile court. With amazing quickness the news of the new haven for homeless boys spread and in practically no time it was filled beyond capacity.

Donations Finance Work.

It was hard going in the early days, for Father Flanagan's Home, then as now, was supported entirely by the donations of friends and sympathetic persons. Then, as now, it admitted boys regardless of race or creed, and gave them the best it had. The best, on the first Christmas day, that of 1917, was a barrel of sauerkraut. Together they all knelt and prayed that a nation would forget the hatreds and excitements of war long enough to help them to live a real, American life.

Mayor Dan Kampan of Boys Town (Holding Paper) Presides Over a Meeting of the City Council.

Their prayers must have been answered, for shortly afterward Father Flanagan was successful in financing the purchase of 160 acres of farm which had lain idle and neglected for years. The farm had a few flimsy frame buildings, but they promised shelter, and food could be secured from the land.

Today, through Father Flanagan's untiring efforts and the financial help of thousands of friends, who gave what they could, however little it was, there are 10 fine, modern buildings and the well-operated farm covers 360 acres. Nearly 4,000 boys, once homeless and friendless, have been built into good American citizens with every prospect of a fair deal from life.

Only half of these boys were Catholics. They came from 38 states, the District of Columbia, Canada, Alaska, China and Mexico.

The boys are taught trades or business pursuits or farming, as their abilities and ambitions dictate. Tennis, baseball, football, track and other sports, as well as sanitary and hygienic education, enable them to grow into healthy, vigorous men. The average efficiency of health maintained over a period of years is 98 per cent.

Boys Town Makes This City Waif's Dream Come True

Mayor Tells His Story.

Only 18 months ago, the unusual community was incorporated as a village. It has a second-class post office, and if you write a letter to anyone there, your reply will come postmarked "Boys Town, Neb."

The mayor of Boys Town faces problems daily that few mayors in the land become acquainted with very well in an entire term. You would expect Mayor Dan Kampan to know as much about the town as any of its 217 inhabitants. I have invited him to tell about it as he knows it:

"First," says Dan Kampan, "let me call your attention to the spirit of the homeless boy, best portayed by the athletic teams which are trained by coaches at Boys Town.

"Every instructor at Boys Town realizes the spirit of co-operation involved in the making of good athletic teams. Last year this spirit was brought out by the splendid records our teams established, often having to overcome odds that were thought invincible. Our football team often came from behind in the last minutes of play to overcome their opponents.

Boys Are Happy Lot.

"The boys in general are a happy and very appreciative group of boys. They, at all times, are willing to jump at the opportunity of helping their friends and boys who have no friends.

"From all parts of the United States homeless and abandoned boys receive shelter and food at Boys Town," Dan goes on. "In this manner they are brought together and after spending a few months at Boys Town they understand some of the boys, and learn many facts of that part of the country that this or that boy came from.

"When Father Flanagan rented a building for his first Home, it was a simple structure located in Omaha. Through the past 18 years it has developed into an institution made up of 10 large buildings, amongst which are a modernly equipped gymnasium containing a swimming pool, handball courts, boxing ring, stage, and an auditorium which has been rated as one of the best in the Middle West.

Many Help Work Farm.

"Our farm, of 320 acres on which four barns are located, produces partial upkeep of the boys. It is equipped with machinery to plant and harvest its produce," Dan continues.

"The print shop, which is part of the office building, contains enough machinery to publish 110,000 copies of the 16-page magazine published monthly by the boys. All other printing necessary for the maintenance of our Home is done by the boys.

"The recreational section of Boys Town is composed of a football field, tennis courts, baseball diamond, and a cinder track. Upon these fields 200 homeless boys build strong bodies and strong minds by participating in various sports. Amongst these sports we find that the most popular are football, baseball, tennis, basketball and all water sports.

Jan. 15 Is Election Day.

"The band, which is known all over the United States, is made up of 50 pieces, all boys under the age of eighteen. The popularity of our musical organizations is proven by the invitations for personal appearances in our neighboring states, such as banquets, picnics, parades and sport programs.

"On January 15, 1936, Boys Town held its second annual election, for the purpose of electing a governing body.

"In the voting booths installed, each boy voted a straight ticket for one of the two parties, the Help Boys Town and the Build Boys Town. After this the votes were counted in the presence of both candidates for the mayoralty. When the results were announced it was found that the Help Boys Town party was the victor by nine votes! The party consists of a mayor and six commissioners, each having his various duties and assignments to fulfill.

"Among the most important of these duties is that of disciplining the boys, which is accomplished through the City Council and a Board of Advisors headed by Father Flanagan, which meets twice a week to discuss various points concerning the welfare of the boys. This is but one of the chief duties of the governing body. Other duties are taking care of minor infractions of rules and boys who cause disturbances by fighting and continuous disobedience.

Father Flanagan and Boys Town insist "there is no such thing as a bad boy." They have seen too many youngsters, once characterized as "bad boys," grow, after given a home, friends and a fair chance in life, into men who have become leaders in the business and social world.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

Make up your mind that it is senseless to quarrel.

You will meet many people that you dislike.

At Least Tolerate Your Neighbor

Many of them will be quarrelsome, conceited, ill tempered. Avoid such people, but tolerate them. They may turn out to be better than you think they are.

There is plenty of room on this earth for human beings of all sorts and kind.

Some of them will differ with you in politics, others in religion.

Some may be downright ugly.

But they are as they are made. Quarreling with them will make you unhappy, and you're going to need all the happiness you can find as you travel through life.

* * *

Some of them may be snobbish and "high hat". You can easily keep away from that sort.

But you will be thrown in with certain people whom you cannot avoid.

They may live next door to you, they may belong to the same church or club, they may intrude themselves upon you in many unpleasant ways.

It will do you no good to "get your back up" when they are around.

You will get only misery out of quarreling with them.

Just convince yourself that there must be that kind of people in the world with you, and that the easiest way is to be as cheerful as possible in their presence, eschew arguments with them, and let them go their own way.

* * *

You can kill mosquitoes and spiders and rattlesnakes and other creatures with which you may be thrown as you go on.

You can't kill human beings without getting into serious trouble. I do not contend that you ought to nurse odious people in your bosom, or try to reform them.

All I suggest is that if you must be with them you will not be unhappy about it, but get along as well you can.

And now and then you are pretty sure to find that somebody you thought was a pest was a really good sort when you came to know him well, and that you lost a good deal by not getting better acquainted with him.

* * *

Dislike reacts on the person who harbors it. Better figure that wherever you go you will find men and women who are constant irritations to you.

Leave them alone if you can.

If you can't, just be civil and pleasant and if they resent that keep out of their neighborhood.

The chief end of man I honestly believe is happiness.

You can't be happy when you are hating other people.

But toleration will put it out of their power to annoy you.

Try this plan for a couple of weeks. I think you will profit by it.

National Bank Notes

Changes in our money on the scale of about $800,000,000 are now going on through the retirement of national bank notes. This is reflected in increasing deposits in the Treasury of lawful money to replace bonds held against outstanding notes which will require some time for withdrawal from circulation.

The change in the currency will require a considerable shift of bank funds in many cases, but it is doubtful if so large a volume of currency has ever been retired and replaced in any country with so little disturbance.

SILVER DOLLAR BRADY RENTS PENTHOUSE FOR PRIZE HORSE

Silver Dollar Brady, wealthy cowboy from Dallas, has the world's first "penthouse corral" high above Chicago on the 17th floor of Hotel Sherman. Brady and his horse are shown here "at home" looking out over the city's attractive skyline.

"More Silver Dollars in circulation will bring back better business conditions a whole lot faster."

That's the idea of Silver Dollar Brady, who arrived in Chicago today, with the intention of getting more Silver Dollars in circulation.

Brady, big, six-foot wealthy rancher from the West, walked into the Hotel Sherman today, his prize horse trailing behind. First, he registered with the horse at his heels . . . then he went into the coffee shop and both man and beast had a bite to eat.

He had wired for reservations for himself and horse, and was given a penthouse high above the street on the 17th floor, with a special corral, hay, oats and all, for his horse.

"The trouble with paper dollars is, you don't feel 'em in your pocket," Brady said. "Now, it's different with Silver Dollars. You know you got 'em. They seem to mean a whole lot more. But because they're heavy, you spend 'em a lot quicker."

Brady said he was going to urge Chicago merchants to pay their employees in Silver Dollars.

"Then you just watch business boom," he said.

Brady, who is an Ambassador of Good Will for the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas, wears a valuable belt made of old and rare Silver Dollars.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

How much attention do you pay to the wheels of your car? This is a very important item and proper maintenance makes it a very essential safety item.

Wheels should be in true alignment at all times. Steering is much simpler and easier if this is true, and there will be minimum wear on the tires if the wheels are always in line. Excessive wear of tires will result when they are not in alignment, weakening the tire, so that even a new tire may suddenly blow out, probably at a very dangerous moment.

Most service stations are equipped with proper alignment gauges. It is, however, a job for an experienced mechanic rather than the average motorist to keep his wheels lined up.
